Savile case triggers rise in therapy for victims of sex abuse

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

WIDESPREAD claims of horrific abuse at the hands of disgraced TV star Jimmy Savile have sparked a flood of calls to victim support groups across the county.

Organisations which help sufferers of sexual abuse say the high profile case has brought back painful memories of personal experiences to victims, prompting them to seek help.

Experts say the Savile scandal had also given some the courage to speak out for the first time about historic abuse, having hidden it for decades.

Gravesend-based rape crisis centre Family Matters, which offers counselling to victims, has seen a surge in calls.

Operations director Malcolm Gilbert said the most noticeable effect was the rise in applications for therapy from new clients.

"Incidentally, one or two past clients have come back to us because the Savile issues have stirred up old stuff," he said. "In fact, we have just had a visit from an ex client who felt her therapy with us had transformed her life and she is glad the issues with Jimmy Savile are out there because, in her view, it's empowering more victims to come forward and seek help to be a 'survivor' and not a victim, as she now sees herself."

He added: "As more people are apparently seeking help then something good will come from the high profile nature of this abuse."

"It will shake our complacency and help us understand how prevalent this abuse is and how we must be constantly vigilant to its existence."

Mr Gilbert said Family Matters had not been able to process all its new applications as yet, but the charity was

ELECTION

PCC candidate branded 'curiously lightweight' over YouTube video

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

CONTENDERS in the upcoming Police and Crime Commissioner race say a high profile rival has hit a bum note after she released a campaign video on YouTube featuring a parody of Gilbert and Sullivan's Mayor-General song.

They said the clip, uploaded by the team behind independent candidate Ann Barnes, was "curiously lightweight".

In the song, the original words are replaced with lyrics explaining her manifesto and why the public should vote for her in the November election.

But her rivals have accused her of not taking the election seriously enough.

Independent candidate Dai Liyanage, former Lib Dem Mayor of Medway, said: "We all like a laugh but the post of PCC is too serious to be the target of a joke, even one that falls flat.

"Gilbert and Sullivan were mildly subversive comedians a time long gone. If this is the message Ann Barnes thinks will impress the voters, then what does it say about her judgement?"

Tory candidate and Medway councillor Craig Mackinlay called it a "curiously lightweight approach to what is a serious election".

But Mrs Barnes, former chair of the Kent Police Authority, accused her rivals of having "no sense of humour".

"The song was a present from friends who thought it would cheer me up while I was in the middle of my campaign," she said. "We thought it was great so I put it on my website. The lyrics talk about my manifesto.

"I'm taking this whole thing very seriously - I may not take myself too seriously, but this election is something I'm working very hard on and taking extremely seriously.

"These are destructive comments they're making. They have no sense of humour.

"The problem here is these candidates are so steeped in politics they are using the old, tired ping-pong adversarial politics and I'm not playing their game. If that's the only thing they have to say then how sad is that?"

The film takes on the Gilbert and Sullivan song I am the Very Model of a Modern Major-General and replaces the title lyrics with "she is the very model of a very Kentish police commissioner".

The PCC election is being held on Thursday, November 15. Everybody eligible to vote can do so and the person elected will replace the Kent Police Authority on November 22.

An official list of candidates will be announced this week.

The PCC will replace the Kent Police Authority, which currently holds the chief constable to account and decides the force's budget and policing priorities.

CANDIDATE:

Ann Barnes has put the humorous video about her campaign manifesto on her website

The successful candidate, who will be paid a salary of £85,000, will have the power to hire and fire the chief constable, set the police budget, write and publish a police and crime plan, and commission services.

The chief constable will remain responsible for operational matters but the PCC will decide how policing money is spent.

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Conjoined twins joy

TWO conjoined twins are recovering at home this week after surgeons at Great Ormond Street Hospital separated them.

Rosie and Ruby Formosa, from Bexleyheath, had been born joined at the abdomen and sharing part of an intestine.

Surgery the day after they were born proved a success and the girls, now 12 weeks old, are expected to make a full recovery.

Mum Angela said she was "incredibly grateful" to Great Ormond Street Hospital staff for their efforts.

➔ Stones tickets hit £20k

TICKETS for shows by Dartford rockers the Rolling Stones in London next month are already being put on sale on secondary ticketing sites with a price tag of a staggering £20,000 each.

The band confirmed they would perform at the O2 Arena in Greenwich.

The face value of tickets range from £106 to £406. But some sellers on Seatwave are selling them for £19,999.

➔ 20-year rape charges

A 49-year-old man from West Malling has been charged with raping two women more than 20 years ago.

Police arrested Ian John Phipps, of Hurricane Road, on Tuesday and charged him on Tuesday with the rape of a woman in Halling in 1986 and another at Wrotham Hill in 1991.

He appeared before Medway magistrates on Thursday.

AIRPORT

There's no need for a new runway at Gatwick, say upset campaigners

PLANS by Gatwick Airport chiefs to examine options of building a new runway to help ease the country's air capacity crisis have sparked anger across west Kent.

Many communities, already blighted by living under the flight path, say additional traffic could mean planes soaring over their homes once every minute. There are also concerns of the impact a second runway will have on the environment and air quality.

But, in a boost to north Kent, a new runway at Gatwick will take the heat off proposals to build an airport in the Thames Estuary.

Gatwick bosses believe the proposals have advantages over expansion at Heathrow and Stansted and the building of a Thames airport.

However, due to a 1979 legal agreement with West Sussex County Council, it would not be able to be built before 2019.

In a statement released this week, Gatwick Airport Limited said it is working on detailed options for a new runway. It said the Government's Independent Commission on Aviation Connectivity, chaired by Sir Howard Davies will then consider the options.

But Haver resident David Baron, who is part of campaign group Gatwick Anti-Noise Group (GANG), said the additional noise would be devastating. He said: "It's disgraceful. We have lived here for 13 years and at first there was very little disturbance, now an aircraft flies over every two minutes. During the summer when you want to sit outside you can't. You can't sleep with the windows open. It will be disastrous."

Mr Baron said he did not think the plans would go forward as there is too much "ill feeling" about it in west Kent and Surrey.

A spokesman from Protect Kent said the organisation opposes a second runway at Gatwick. He said: "As all airports have either spare terminal or runway capacity, if they began to use available capacity more effectively, there is no need to think about building any new runways, let alone airports."

MP for Tonbridge and Malling, Sir John Stanley, has also spoken out against such plans. Sir John wrote to Kent County Council after it released a report backing a second Gatwick runway, stating it would have environmentally devastating consequences for west Kent.

Shortfall in grammar school places means a testing time for parents

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

AN ANXIOUS wait for parents to learn the fate of their child's performance in the 11-plus came to an end this week, triggering a race to secure a place at one of the county's grammar schools.

Both the results for the Kent Test and Medway Test were emailed and then mailed to parents.

In Kent, 5,370 children were found suitable for grammar school out of the 11,451 that sat the test – a 45 per cent success rate. Some 1,298 of the successful youngsters live outside the county – a figure similar to recent years, and a key factor in pressure on places in the west of county.

This 5,370 will now hope to secure one of 4,545 grammar school places in Kent, meaning 825 will miss out.

In Medway, 2,078 children sat the test, including those from outside the area, with 923 found suitable for grammar school. There are 926 selective places available in Medway.

There is now a ten-day countdown to when all parents of children in Year 6 moving up to secondary schools in September 2013 must apply to their local authority, stating their preferred choices. They will learn their fate on March 1 when appeals can begin. Those in Kent can list four schools and in Medway, six.

Kent County Council cabinet member for education, learning and skills, Mike Whiting, said: "I would encourage any families who haven't yet decided which school to apply for, to talk to primary headteachers about which schools would be best suited to meeting their child's educational needs and then visit the schools they are most interested in before applying."

Eight secondaries in Kent are deemed "super-selective", where they can give priority to children who scored the highest marks in the Test.

Skinner's School in Tunbridge Wells; The Judd School in Tonbridge; Tonbridge Grammar School; Rochester Grammar School; Rainham Mark Grammar in Gillingham; Dartford Grammar School for Girls; and Simon Langton for Boys in Canterbury are all deemed super-selective. It means children who qualified for a grammar in those areas will not necessarily gain a place unless they scored over a certain target.

Education expert Peter Read, of Kent Independent Education Advice, offers support and information to parents going through the application process. He also assists with appeals.

He said in Medway there was a review process following the test where parents were entitled to apply for a review of the decision. This is designed to select another two per cent of suitable children.

Parents are also entitled to appeal a school's decision not to accept a child.

"The important thing is that parents understand that they can't appeal against a decision that finds their child non-selective," said Mr Read. "What they can do is put a grammar school on the list of preferred choices, even if the child is not found suitable for grammar. When places are announced, they can then appeal against the school turning their child down."

Mr Read directed parents to his website www.kentadvice.co.uk/home for more information.

Download KCC's Admission to Secondary School in Kent 2013 booklet at www.kent.gov.uk or go to www.kent.gov.uk/ola to apply online.

Simon was Group Editor of Archant Life's county magazine titles in the South East before he started his new role on Wednesday.

He has a long association with Kent. He is a former editor of the Kent Messenger and was a director of the KM Group.

He said: "This is a challenging and exciting time for all media businesses. I am really looking forward to meeting our readers and customers."

"I have an excellent team here and I feel that we are ideally placed to offer the most compelling and useful all-Kent content to our readers and the best and most cost-effective service to our advertisers."

Archant Lifestyle Regional managing director Tim Thurston said: "Simon's brief is to grow both Kent on Sunday and Kent Life to even greater heights. We feel the combination of the county's two premier brands will be a powerful tool for our existing and new customers."

CRIME

Chip shop owner must pay up or eat porridge

A FISH and chip shop owner who was caught dodging tax has been given two weeks to pay £200,000 back to the revenue – or spend three years behind bars.

Russell Fox, 46, of Maidstone, was caught out by HM Revenue and Customs investigators who found he had been lying about the income of his business, the Little Fish Shop in Sandgate, for six years. They discovered he had routinely provided his accountant with rewritten weekly takings sheets that were lower than those provided by his manager.

Till rolls were also missing, and cash deducted from the true takings spreadsheets ranged from £365 to £5,250 per week. Investigators found that between 2005 and 2011, Fox failed to pay income tax of over £91,000 and national insurance contributions of more than £15,000.

He also swindled his VAT returns, resulting in an underpayment of almost £68,500.

Canterbury Crown Court ordered Fox to pay the £200,000 confiscation order after he failed to pay £175,000 in tax and national insurance. HMRC said the order included an amount to reflect the value of the fraud at today's prices.

In addition, he was sentenced to 12 months imprisonment, suspended for two years. He must also complete 250 hours community service and adhere to a three-month curfew.

SO WHAT HAPPENS NOW?

■ The closing date to apply for a selective and non-selective secondary school place for September, 2013, in both Kent and Medway is Wednesday, October 31.

However, because of the October school holiday, applications received before 5pm on Monday, November 5, will be considered by Kent County Council to be on time.

■ The national offer day is March 1, 2013. Families who registered online and provided an email address will be sent an email after 4pm on Friday, March 1. Letters will be sent to all families by first-class post to arrive March 2.

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Swotting up on drugs

A MAJOR push to crack down on drug misuse rolled out this week, with officers visiting a school in Gravesend to warn of the perils they pose.

The visits, which have already toured part of the county, will now tackle the issue in north Kent, kicking off last week at the St John's Catholic Comprehensive. The presentation will be followed up by a screening of the school and its pupils for drug possession at a later date.

➔ Injunction in land row

THE High Court has granted an injunction on a plot of rural land in Frittenden, preventing the site's owners from using the land as a residential caravan site, in the latest twist in a planning dispute.

Granted to Tunbridge Wells Borough Council, owner Alfred Brazil must remove mobile homes and demolish shed and outbuildings at Hatchin Tan in Grandshore Lane, by August 2013.

The council welcomed the decision.

➔ Unity with waste deal

AN IMPROVED waste collection and recycling service is to be rolled out across Maidstone after three local councils joined forces.

Maidstone, Ashford and Swale have united in a bid to cut costs with a joint waste and street cleansing contract – subject to legal formalities being completed. Those in the county town will see the scheme introduced from August 2013. It promises higher levels of recycling and composting.

EXHIBITION

Museum first stop for iconic Matisse work

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

CROWDS are set to flock for a touring exhibition of the work of world-famous artist Henri Matisse as it arrives in Maidstone.

The exhibition, Matisse Drawing with Scissors, will be on show at the Maidstone Museum and Bentrif Art Gallery from October 20 to November 18. It is the first stop on a nationwide jaunt organised by the Hayward Gallery on London's Southbank.

Drawing with Scissors features the artist's late works from 1950-1954, with 35 original litho-graphic prints of the famous cut-outs produced in the last four years of his life when Matisse was confined to his bed.

The prints include many of his iconic images, such as The Snail and the Blue Nudes.

Matisse, who was born in 1869, began his working life as a lawyer, before going to Paris to study art in 1890.

He soon created his own style and in 1905 he and his colleagues were branded the Fauves (wild beasts) because of their unconventional use of colour. It was during this time that Matisse painted his famous Luxe, Calme et Volupté (Luxury, Tranquillity and Delight).

The lithographic reproductions in the exhibition to be shown at Maidstone are taken from an issue of Verve, a review of art and literature, published in 1958.

A Maidstone Council spokeswoman said: "We are thrilled to have the Matisse print exhibition in Maidstone."

"Matisse was one of the 20th century's most important artists and we've all seen examples of his work whether we realise it or not in TV and media advertising."

"His work still has a freshness about it and the Drawing with Scissors exhibition features examples of his output from the very end of his life."

"We are expecting the exhibition to attract large numbers of art lovers and other visitors curious about all the fuss."

A six-foot bronze sculpture created by the artist recently sold for £30.2 million at auction, while the oil painting The Cowslips, Blue and Rose Fabric, sold for £28.4m in 2009.

Maidstone Museum is offering visitors the chance to have a go at making their own Matisse inspired picture on October 27 at a free Big Draw event run in conjunction with the University for Creative Arts.

Entry to the exhibition is £3 per adult and free for children.

ATTRACTION

Chilly reception for festive attraction in row over controversial costumes

By Chrissie Daniels

chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

A CHRISTMAS tourist attraction has this week defended claims that its use of indigenous dress is "racist" – and vowed to phase it out.

LaplandUK, based at Bewl Water, aims to create a festive wonderland for families in the build up to Christmas and is now in its fifth year.

As part of its popular winter extravaganza, it sets out to educate visitors on the indigenous Sámi people by dressing in their clothes and displaying artifacts.

But members of the Sámi community say the way their culture has been used is offensive and launched an online campaign.

The Sámi live in Sápmi which covers parts of Sweden, Norway, Finland and the Kola Peninsula of Russia – areas that are often referred to as Lapland.

This week, outraged members of the Sámi community took to LaplandUK's Facebook page to express their anger at what they describe as "racist" behaviour.

They say the outfits used at the attraction are nothing to do with Sámi communities and that the stereotypes of Sámi people herding

COSTUME: To minimise offence LaplandUK have said they will phase out the use of Sámi dress reindeer and the association with Father Christmas is offensive.

Sámi Neeta Inari, 27, from Finland, said: "They are picking the easiest stereotype. Most Sámi look nothing like that. They are not telling the story of Sámi people, they are telling the story of something fictional. It's a very small part of our heritage."

Ms Inari said stereotyping Sámi people is not just a problem at LaplandUK and that a mixture of myths and advertisements have created an image of the Sámi.

She added that companies use the Sámi culture as a "product" in a bid to make profits.

Another Sámi online said: "There are so many things wrong, offensive and misleading in the way you [LaplandUK] present the Sámi people and the Sámi culture. As a Sámi woman, it is nothing short of embarrassing and shameful."

LaplandUK responded online by saying it never wanted to misrepresent the Sámi people and simply wants to share their story.

It has also said it will begin to "phase out" use of the Sámi dress which will be completed by the end of the year, a move welcomed by Ms Inari and online posters.

LaplandUK director Alison Battle said she was upset by the use of the word racist and, as a former teacher, has spent time researching and learning the history of the Sámi.

Mrs Battle added that the company purchased the clothes in Finland and the artifacts have been borrowed by the Jokkmokk museum in Sweden.

She said: "We appreciate the Sámi culture and wish to positively promote it and educate people."

Lennart Pittja from VisitSápmi said: "VisitSápmi works to develop sustainable and respectful Sámi tourism based on Sámi values. I have very little knowledge of LaplandUK and their operations but from what I've seen online, this is a classic example of how they use Sámi culture in a disrespectful way."

"If LaplandUK were serious about spreading knowledge about Sámi culture they would involve Sámi people in the process and make sure that their efforts are made in true co-operation with Sámi people."

Mrs Battle said she would love to work with Sámi people at the attraction and was happy to speak with the community further.

SPORT

Boxing at Bluewater packs a punch despite scuffle outside the venue

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

CHIEFS at shopping behemoth Bluewater say they hope to stage more major sporting events at the complex after its debut boxing match proved a sell-out.

A capacity crowd of 2,700 turned out to watch 2008 Olympic gold medal winner James DeGale successfully defend his European super-middle-weight title at the Glow venue, at the Greenhithe site.

The bout was beamed live on Channel 5 and in America.

However, despite organisers declaring the event a success, it did not all go to plan, with police called after a fight broke out outside the venue and one man was arrested.

A spokesman for Bluewater said: "We can confirm an arrest was made on Saturday evening. The police attended the minor incident, which did not mar an otherwise successful evening."

Glow will now look to build on the success of the event as it looks to establish itself as a major venue in the county.

Robert Goodman, Bluewater's general manager, said: "The atmosphere was electric and the feedback from the public, both directly on the night and via social media, has been incredibly positive.

"The one question every has been asking is

Picture: CHRIS ROYLE/TGSPHOTO

BIG HIT: James DeGale (right) retained his European title at Bluewater

'what's next?'. The boxing has been a great success, and we look forward to hosting more sports events in the future."

Mick Hennessy, of fight promoters Hennessy Sports, added: "The combination of the two halls at Glow worked perfectly, with the public able to use the bar and catering facilities downstairs before heading to the upper halls to watch the bouts. We will be back, and I am confident we will not be alone in bringing live sport to the south east at Glow."

The purpose-built, £60 million venue is designed as a major events and exhibition space at Bluewater.

UNDERCARD

JAMES DeGale's title fight was preceded by a support bill of eight other bouts, among them the son of former world middleweight and super-middleweight champion Chris Eubank.

Brighton-based Chris Eubank Jr continued his impressive unbeaten run as a professional with victory, while Lenny Daws won the vacant EU light-welterweight title.

ALCOHOL

Crack down on booze

AN ALCOHOL awareness programme will be launched in Snodland next week with the aim of cracking down on alcohol misuse among young people.

They include sales of booze to the under age and antisocial behaviour. The event by the Kent Community Alcohol Programme is at 2pm on October 25 outside the Co-Op on the High Street.

POLICE

Warning on car crime

POLICE have warned walkers to take extra care of their cars in rural areas after a spate of thefts.

Kent Police say there have been 19 incidents over the last month, with car windows smashed and handbags stolen at a number of sites across the county.

PC Lewis Tompsett said: "The advice is simple – do not leave anything of value in your car."

Housing scheme is born to support teenage parents

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

TEENAGE parents are being given intensive support through a dedicated housing scheme which looks to stop children being taken into care.

Young mums and dads will be able to access housing in one of six new apartments in Maidstone with support services helping them to eventually move on to live independently.

Golding Homes and Kent County Council, which are delivering the scheme, say it is designed to reduce interventions by social services, as well as cutting the risk of domestic abuse and homelessness. It also looks to tackle the issue of young mothers having a second child.

Staff are on hand to offer guidance and support and there is a comprehensive resettlement and move-on service in place.

Aimed at young people aged 16 to 21 who are pregnant or have dependent children, the scheme offers 17.5 hours of support a week and can run to as long as two years, depending on the parent's needs.

Golding Homes' head of support services, Rose Ellison, said it would offer an innovative and people-based service to a vulnerable group.

"We have been working with teenage parents in Maidstone since 2009, and understand the complexities of the issues they face," she said.

Teenage parents are given individual care packages. There is an on-site training kitchen

RISE IN PREGNANCIES

OFFICIAL figures released this year showed teenage pregnancy rates in Kent were continuing to grow despite levels being at their lowest nationwide since 1969.

Kent showed a rise in the number of girls aged 15-17 falling pregnant in several districts.

Dover, Gravesham, Shepway and Medway saw small increases and Maidstone and Thanet the highest rises with 23.4 per cent and 22.2 per cent respectively.

Health bosses stressed, however, that in most cases the high percentage increases amounted to just a handful of girls.

In Maidstone there were 87 teen conceptions in 2008/09 and 108 in 2009/10. Thanet had 128 in 2008/09 and 148 in 2009/10.

Swale – which historically has battled high teenage pregnancy rates – bucked the Kent-wide trend with a 10.4 per cent drop.

and IT suite as well as communal lounge, external garden and play area.

Maidstone Borough Council, which helped fund the programme, said the scheme would help teach teenage parents necessary life skills.

Not all doom and gloom as annual report reveals rise in home values

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

A MAJOR new report has shown the value of both residential and commercial property in Kent remains above the national average, despite the current economic downturn.

The 21st annual Kent Property Market Report, revealed at Kings Hill this week – which reviews the county's commercial, retail, tourism, rural and residential property markets, and its regeneration programmes – does show some optimism, but confirms growth is slow.

But plans to boost economic growth and create jobs, as well as the recent upgrading of transport links to London, are a boost to Kent's economic prospects, say analysts.

The average value of properties on the residential market are 0.2 per cent ahead of last year, according to figures from the Land Registry – but this is driven partially by demand for large homes in prosperous parts of the west of the county.

Elsewhere, compared to the rest of the UK, Kent's performance is favourable – albeit in a very subdued financial climate.

Retail warehousing is showing a rental growth of 1.2 per cent, following its above average growth of one per cent in 2010, while rents were still falling at a regional level.

The Kent industrial market saw its pace of rental decline slowed to 0.6 per cent from 0.9 – again better than elsewhere in the UK.

Retail has suffered from the economic downturn and is currently fighting against internet consumer trading – but the rate of rental falls has slowed, falling by 1.8 per cent in 2011, compared to a fall of 6.5 per cent in 2010.

Initiatives are in place to promote growth, such as the purchase of the former Pfizer site in Sandwich by Discovery Park Limited.

The Kent Property Market Report is an annual survey produced by Kent County Council's Regeneration & Economic Development division, Cluttons LLP and Locate in Kent.

Dalai Lama and Lumley unite to back cookbook

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IT'S not every day your first recipe book gets signed by the Dalai Lama and backed by TV star Joanna Lumley, but this chef climbed mountains to get the right endorsements for his tome on Nepalese cuisine.

The Ultimate Nepalese Cook Book was written by former Gurkha soldier Pemba Lama. And to show off his dishes, a tasting evening has been organised for next month, showcasing some of the finest meals the nation has to offer. It is being held at Woods Restaurant, The Pantiles, Tunbridge Wells, on Friday, November 16 from 7.30pm.

TASTY: Spicy recipes

Author and Nepalese chef, Pemba said he is preparing a £30 Nepalese buffet with every guest receiving a free signed copy of the new £15 recipe book.

Kent's own Nicci Gurr, of Home Gurr'own, provided the puddings for the book and will create tasty Nepalese desserts with a British twist.

It is all in aid of the Gurkha Welfare Trust, with the publishers making a donation to the trust for every cookbook presented to diners. Kent has strong links to the Gurkhas, with the Nepalese troops based in Folkestone and Maidstone.

The book was very nearly never published at all. An extraordinary twist of events was driven by Cranbrook-based Annie Watsham.

The writer and ardent supporter of the Gurkhas was the widely reported 'mystery woman' who suggested in 2008 that the award-winning actress Joanna Lumley, whose father served with the Gurkhas, should become involved in the Gurkha Justice Campaign.

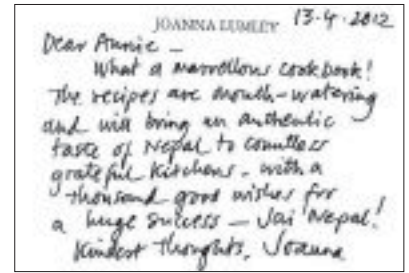

Ms Watsham then set up an online community in 2009 – www.gurkhabusinesscommunity.com – and came to hear from ex-Gurkha chef Pemba Lama who, clutching a pile of recipes he had collected and developed during his career, suggested the idea of bringing them together into The Ultimate Nepalese Cook Book.

Ms Watsham said: "When I heard about Pemba's amazing story, and saw his obvious talent and experience of cooking around the world for a quarter of a century as a civilian and for the Army, I instinctively felt that this was a culinary story that needed to be told and The Ultimate Nepalese Cook Book is the result of that three-year journey."

Nepalese cuisine is a fusion of Chinese, Tibetan and Indian cooking that has resulted in a unique Himalayan cuisine.

Pemba served in the British Army for 23 years as a senior Gurkha catering officer, and has cooked for the Dalai Lama, the Queen and celebrity chef Jamie Oliver. More recently he and his daughter Kessang cooked alongside Madhur Jaffrey, for a television programme featuring Nepalese cuisine due to be aired this winter.

HOLY HELP: The Dalai Lama signs a copy of chef Pemba Lama's cookbook, which is also supported by actress Joanna Lumley. A dinner featuring its recipes will raise cash for the Gurkha Welfare Trust

Fury erupts over 'slaughter' of services in county budget

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

A ROW has broken out between council chiefs over a budget described as ushering in a "whole-sale slaughter of vital services".

Gravesham Borough Council – the only local authority in Kent where Labour holds the majority – has accused Tory-run Kent County Council of delivering a "body blow" to vital services.

Leader John Burden said the County Hall budget would stretch the borough's resources.

"The harsh reality is it will hit the least well-off and the vulnerable, especially the elderly, the young and the unemployed, at a time when they most need help," he said.

KCC, which is planning to freeze its slice of the council tax for a third year running, revealed last month it needed to cut at least £60 million from next year's budget.

The hardest hit groups would be vulnerable adults and children, with £18.8m cuts to adult social care and £3m from specialist children's services.

Cllr Burden said: "KCC has manufactured this budget in order to maintain council tax rates – but it is not only full of holes, it doesn't take account of the latest round of government grant cuts," he said.

"Worse still, it puts more pressure on the boroughs who have to clean up the mess left behind. This isn't 'onion slicing' any more, it's the whole-sale slaughter of vital services on the altar of keeping KCC's share of council tax down as we approach an election year."

But KCC Tory member for Gravesham East, Bryan Sweetland, launched a scathing response.

He said the priority for KCC was to protect the most vulnerable people while keeping council tax rises at bay.

He said: "In contrast, Gravesham council has, in the middle of a recession, increased council tax by three per cent, hit council house tenants with a rent increase of more than eight per cent, hiked town centre parking charges by a whopping 68 per cent and ended free weekend parking for residents to fund a highly-paid full-time chief executive because Cllr Burden cannot attend the council offices on a regular basis."

KCC leader Paul Carter accused Gravesham council of "scaremongering".

He said: "In this era of austerity, local government across the country has had to contend with a substantially reduced government grant and deliver savings of 30 per cent over three years."

"KCC has broadly delivered these highly challenging savings with minimal impact on the delivery of good quality front line services."

New housing scheme reveals ancient secrets

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

ONE of Kent's oldest settlements is about to become one of the county's newest.

But archaeologists are determined to glean as much information and knowledge about Cheeseman's Green before it is turned into a housing estate.

Duncan Hawkins from consultant CgMs and he says it is of vital importance more work is done before the diggers move in.

He said there is a fascinating picture emerging about the way Ashford's agricultural landscape looked from the late Bronze Age through to the early years of Roman occupation.

Already, interesting and unusual finds have been unearthed in the excavations at Cheeseman's Green.

This is a site given planning permission by Ashford Borough Council for up to 1,180 new homes, and the first phase has already started, giving the 'time team' a new impetus.

Thankfully, the developer, Crest Strategic Projects, is known for its supportive and positive approach to archaeology, and it commissioned the large-scale archaeological investigations at Cheeseman's Green.

CgMs is working with Kent County Council heritage experts and Wessex Archaeology to unearth the past.

It has already revealed human activity on the site stretching back 12,000 years, including the flint tools of ancient hunter gatherer communities, and Neolithic, Bronze Age and Iron Age activity sites,

CIRCLE TIME: Evidence of an Iron Age monument has been found settlements and farmsteads.

Mr Hawkins said: "The earliest human activity represented on the site was evidence for Mesolithic hunter gatherers. A large number of flint tools, including knives and axes, were recovered.

"Subsequently the site was settled by Neolithic farmers and there appears to have been a long continuity of agricultural settlement and land division extending from the Neolithic, through the Bronze and Iron ages until the early Roman period.

"The importance of the site is that its scale has allowed the examination of a significant area, and taken in conjunction with previous investigations at Park Farm, Waterbrook Park and the Orbital Park, has allowed archaeologists to determine that settlement density in what is now south Ashford in the late Iron Age and early Roman period was similar to that evidenced in the late post-medieval period in the 17th and 18th century, with a similar density of farms and settlements.

"The new Roman fields were laid out on a grid relating to a new road system, one of which flanks the southern boundary of the site.

"Subsequently, the Roman field systems were abandoned, probably due to climate change in the late Roman period, and the subsequent medieval and post-medieval settlement pattern up to the early 19th century was strikingly similar to that represented in the late pre-historic periods."

Cllr Gerry Clarkson, deputy leader of Ashford council, said: "These important archaeological investigations provide us with a link to Ashford's past that will be of interest not only to the community but have a broader, regional importance.

"It is fascinating to learn about the discoveries and I hope these will be of real interest to everyone interested in the history of the borough as well as adding to the national store of knowledge."

Mr Hawkins said the entire development site will eventually be examined and the findings published.

Skills base is under threat

While he welcomes the prospect of tens of thousands of new jobs, Roger Vickerman warns they are not the solution to our problems

THE announcement of the possible development of a leisure theme park in north Kent that will create – it is claimed – up to 27,000 jobs is a major boost to the local economy.

The Kent economy, and particularly that of west and north Kent, has generally been highly dependent on the London economy for growth, although it has tended to lag behind the more dynamic aspects.

Thus the implementation of a major new job generator designed to bring in visitors from across north-west Europe not only creates jobs but makes the areas less dependent on the fortunes of the neighbouring metropolis.

To the extent that the new development on the Swanscombe peninsula can be linked with Ebbsfleet International station it could have knock-on effects which will benefit other businesses in Kent by generating new rail traffic, particularly for Eurostar, which would enable it to improve the frequency of services which stop in Kent.

In addition, this could be the catalyst for the development of a new Thames crossing to relieve the Dartford Crossing. And it is all on a brownfield site, aiding regeneration of redundant industrial land. So this is all a welcome and positive development.

But before we get too carried away, we have to also be aware of some of the less positive aspects.

The Kent economy has seen a significant loss of jobs in manufacturing industry in recent years and Kent has one of the lowest densities of jobs in the high technology sectors in the greater South East.

These are the jobs which generate the value-added and the self-sustaining growth which the local economy needs if it is to be less dependent on the fortunes of other regions.

Kent has lost significant numbers of these jobs, the most recent being due to the closure of the Pfizer research facility in Sandwich.

While successful attempts are being made to replace some of the jobs it will be difficult to generate similar jobs in sufficient numbers, and the workers in such jobs are typically highly mobile so their spending power and the skills base will often move away with them.

And that introduces another problem area in the Kent labour market: the lack of a skills base to compete with other neighbouring regions to attract the right sort of new investment and jobs.

While there will be skilled jobs in the new park, they will be a small proportion of the total job creation, many are likely to be less skilled and relatively low-wage jobs.

We cannot object to job crea-

If skill acquisition is not necessary to find a job then there is less incentive to learn tion when there are many unemployed, and the jobs are likely to appeal to the young unemployed who are a particular concern, but then it becomes an unfortunate circle.

If skill acquisition is not necessary to find a job then there is less incentive to acquire such skills and the skills base remains low, possibly too low to attract high quality, high value added jobs.

The lesson here is not to object to the new park, it will bring much-needed jobs into the country and direct expenditure by visitors, but to recognise that it is not a solution in itself. It will require continuing efforts to develop the appropriate skills to attract this high value activity into Kent which is what is really needed to transform the local economy.

Don't forget the strain felt by our youngsters

JUST as parents recover from the stress of the Kent and Medway Test results, the pressure is back on to make sure they secure a grammar place for their child.

And with hundreds set to miss out, there could be a traumatic time for some next March when school placements are announced.

For although many of those who miss out on a selective place will be from out of county, there will be some Kent children whose dreams of going to their local grammar school are crushed, as a mixture of over-subscription and super-selectives dampen their chances.

What we must remember is these are 11-year-olds and whether for or against the grammar school system, the strain it puts on these youngsters is undeniable.

Equality idea is damaging

AT a meeting in Birmingham Town Hall, on Monday, October 8, the Coalition for Marriage was finally able to present the well-supported view that the proposal from government for Civil Marriage Equality is damaging rather than healing our society and community.

For many this illustrates the yawning chasm between the "trendy" metropolitan worlds of Mr Cameron, Mr Clegg, and Mr Miliband, and the traditional values of many of their voters.

A recent survey of Tory constituency chairmen found that 71 per cent think the proposal – which the Prime Minister has pledged will be law by 2015 – should be abandoned.

Nearly half claim their local parties have lost members as a result of the plans.

Just 11 per cent say same-sex marriage should be a political priority right now, at a time when Whitehall spending is facing deep cuts and ministers are driving forward key reforms in education, health and welfare.

This view seems very well reflected locally, where quiet but clear support is being shown to those of us willing to defend the institution of marriage, unless and until it is properly safeguarded through this proposed change.

Airport will be a jobs boost

PLEASE can we have a pro-estuary airport voice – doesn't anybody who is unemployed around here want a job?

We need things like the airport, the theme park, etc, to get the economy around here going, don't we?

Lin Martin,
Medway

Boris is just point scoring

I think an estuary airport is most definitely surplus to requirements.

The 'urgent review' of airport capacity is more about London Mayor Boris scoring points with his voters. Fortunately, he has jurisdiction neither in Kent nor Parliament but is charismatic and persuasive. God forbid he should successfully challenge David Cameron as Tory Leader – he wouldn't be able to resist making this airport reality.

The funding is foreign so no worries there – though infrastructure upgrades would cost the taxpayer to the tune of £30 billion.

Isn't it about time we had a louder voice as to how our hard-earned taxes are spent?

Speak up, or see this sleeping giant move closer to reality.

The review should involve an appraisal of how the UK could better use its regional airports. How about diverting all internal and tourist flights to regional airports?

Connect Gatwick and Heathrow – expand them if necessary – so that Heathrow/Gatwick remains the international competitive hub for commercial and business flights. Without being nimby-ist I think we should continue developing what is already there.

While they're at it, develop Kent's Manston airport and surely there would be enough airports to satisfy national demand? Not forgetting, of course, flying is probably destined to become the pastime of richer folk and businessmen and women given the upward-spiralling of fuel prices.

Experience is key for PCC

REGARDING the 'party political' comments made to your reporter by the new Conservative justice secretary Chris Grayling, when he said that he does not think a Tory Police and Crime Commissioner would follow the party line.

Who does he think he's kidding when his party is responsible for hundreds of trained and experienced police officers in Kent being made redundant?

This government has deemed that this election is necessary. Therefore, is it not best that we consider the qualifications of each candidate with great care?

Ukip's Cllr Wauchope, 55, is a criminal barrister with 27 years' experience.

He has worked in fighting crime with police officers from more than 12 different forces – therefore, I consider him to be the best qualified candidate named so far.

Yes, he is from Ukip and I have studied their policies and consider them to be of sound, practical common sense. I will be voting for him.

Rusthall

Give us back our tax cash

PRESSURE is growing on the UK Coalition government for action to make the banks pay for the mess they have created. Again, we see, from the Conservative conference, the misinformation applied to our current financial situation.

It is not entirely the Labour Party's problem that we find ourselves in the current financial mess – this is a total lie perpetuated by the Tory Party. In actual fact, we had very right-wing governments throughout the world in power in many western countries during the 'credit-crunch' – 2008 and the build-up to, so I really think the Coalition should stop misinforming us about this.

Particularly in France, and in the US we in fact had very right-wing governments in control, and still the same situations exist in these countries, to a larger or lesser extent.

Again, I say to you, we have had a situation where the banks have been bailed-out to several trillion pounds with our (taxpayers') money, and it is now far beyond the point at which these banks now have to start paying back the UK taxpayer for these bail-outs with very real, and realistic returns to the public purse. This is now far overdue with regard to the payback, and anything less is unacceptable.

So, I ask you yet again, when is the taxpayer going to get their £2.5 trillion back? And it really is no good saying that this was entirely down to the last Labour government, as I didn't hear a single word from David Cameron in official opposition, as to any alternative to the bank bail-out.

It is absolutely clear, in my mind that the Tory Party neither opposed the bank bail-out, or indeed opposed the total deregulation of the banking system prior to the credit crunch in 2008.

Will power solution to previous relationship

Q IN 1986 I married a woman who had a daughter by a previous relationship, and I adopted her. We had no children, and in 1991 we divorced.

I have not seen my ex-wife or her daughter for about 20 years. I remarried in 1999, and now have two children. My question is, could the adopted daughter have any claim against my estate on my death? Would making a will make any difference?

At present, I have no will as I am happy for everything to go to my wife and two children.

A YOU should make a will. If you die intestate, then all your children have the right to share in your estate, and that includes any adopted child.

Making a will that excludes the adopted daughter strengthens your case, but it is not a complete guarantee. She could claim against your estate, saying that leaving her out of your will is likely to cause hardship.

Unless there is something you have not mentioned, I think it is likely a court would reject any such claim.

Your adopted daughter is now an adult. You have not said that you have paid maintenance for her, so I assume you did not or that it ended years ago.

But see a solicitor to make sure your will is perfectly clear, and that only your two recent children are beneficiaries.

Q CAN you tell me what happened to the phone company O2? Are shares still worth anything?

A THE Spanish company Telefonica made a takeover bid for O2 several years ago. If you have O2 shares, you are owed £2 for each share. The money is sitting in the bank, waiting for you to claim it. Call Lloyds TSB on 0870 850 6907.

Q CAN I sue the directors of a limited company that has ceased trading, owing me a refund for faulty goods? The sum involved is £450.

A EXCEPT in unusual circumstances, generally involving some sort of corruption or deceit, directors cannot be sued for the debts of their company. This is what the word 'limited' means. The liability of the people behind the company is limited to the amount they agreed to invest in the first place, which is typically just £1.

Q I AM 63 and have worked for myself for 30 years or more. I have saved about £150,000 in a private pension plan for my retirement.

If I draw this at 65, what sort of pension would I get? I am single with no dependants.

TONY HETHERINGTON
MONEY CLINIC

A ANNUITY rates change regularly, but based on current figures Aviva would pay you a level pension – with no increases – of about £8,900 a year. It could be more if you have health problems or are a smoker. For the best deal, see a local broker as you approach 65.

Q I WAS contacted by Advanced Global Trading, about investing in carbon credits. I like the idea of investing in something ethical, but I have been told to expect profits of 20pc upwards, which sounds a bit too high to be safe.

A BE VERY careful. Advanced Global Trading Ltd was dissolved last February, according to Companies House. If it is still trading, then it shouldn't be, so perhaps someone has hijacked the name. AGT did sell carbon credits as an investment – but again, be careful.

The police and the watchdog Financial Services Authority have issued warnings. This is a new investment area and there are no rules to protect you. Brokers need no licence and there is no proper market for credits so you could find it impossible to turn them back into cash. If you like ethical investments, consider First State Asia Pacific Sustainability Fund (020 7332 6500). This has shown 81pc growth over the past five years. Or try the Royal London Ethical Bond (020 7506 6500), which has shown 9pc growth in the past year.

Q I HAVE received just over £2,000 from the will of a relative. Will this affect my working tax credits, and do I have to declare it?

A WORKING tax credits are based on your income, and an inheritance does not count as income. You do not need to declare the £2,000 itself, but if you invest it, then any income it yields could affect your future credit claims.

Growing stronger after nightmare of '87 crash

It was a grim day for the market, but Black Monday also taught us some vital lessons. ADAM AIKEN reports

THIS week marks the 25th anniversary of Black Monday – the huge crash that wiped tens of billions of pounds off global stock markets.

A quarter of a century on, many traders and investors still remember the sheer terror that gripped the market on October 19, 1987, as shares plummeted and people scrambled to sell their holdings before they lost even more of their value.

We have become all-too-well accustomed to stock market wobbles over the past few years – the crisis of 2008 was particularly pronounced – but Black Monday will remain a nightmare for many people for years to come.

By the end of October, 1987, the stock market in the UK had fallen by 26pc and the US's by 23pc.

These falls were beaten elsewhere, however, and New Zealand was hit particularly badly, with its stock market down by about 60pc from its 1987 peak.

So-called 'program trading' was widely blamed for the events of 1987.

This involves computers reacting to market movements by automatically selling or buying – but the outcome of computers taking this kind of action can result in a snowball effect that just makes matters worse.

As computers reacted to the falls in share prices, they triggered sell-offs that led to the market falling further and faster, and it all became something of a self-fulfilling prophecy.

But while the crash itself caused panic, and there were undoubtedly people who lost a lot of money on that fateful day, there are a number of lessons that can be learnt – and some of them highlight how a stock market crash can be as much an opportunity as it can be a disaster.

KEEP CALM AND CARRY ON

The FTSE 100 ended 1987 higher than it started, and within two years it had surpassed its pre-crash peak.

People who panicked at the time had probably already missed the best moment to sell, and by leaving the market they were preventing themselves from benefiting from the subsequent recovery.

Tom Stevenson, investment director at Fidelity Worldwide Investment, said: "Look through the market gyrations to what is happening in the real world.

"The 1987 crash was triggered by over-exuberance (the market had risen by nearly 40pc in the first nine months of 1987) and was then compounded by automated computer trading. The underlying economy was sound at the time – hence the quick recovery."

TAKE A LONG-TERM VIEW

"The 1987 crash looks insignificant on a long-term chart today even though, at the time, it might have felt like the end of the world," Mr Stevenson said.

DON'T TRY TO TIME THE MARKET

When your emotions are running high, you risk making the wrong investment decisions because we are inherently geared to run from danger. However, the best investors do the reverse and walk towards danger – "albeit with their eyes wide open", said Mr Stevenson.

BE PREPARED FOR THE WORST

It is important to diversify rather than putting all your eggs in one basket. This will mitigate your losses should one particular company, sector or region suffer more than others.

INVEST REGULARLY, A LITTLE AT A TIME

Mr Stevenson said: "This way, you will take advantage of market falls such as the 1987 crash, picking up a few shares or units in a fund when they are cheap – even though your mind is telling you to put your money under the mattress."

KEEP SOME OF YOUR POWDER DRY

Although 1987 was an extreme example, crashes do happen and are part of the ebbs and flows of the stock market.

When they do happen, you want to have some ammunition ready to take advantage.

"It may be frustrating to have even a small proportion of your savings earning next to nothing in cash when shares are rising, but so too is being unable to capitalise on bargain-basement prices when periodically they appear," said Mr Stevenson.

BUY LOW AND SELL HIGH

The stock market is the only market in the world in which people are often tempted to buy when prices are high and can be put off by low prices.

But Mr Stevenson said: "Think about how you would buy fruit and veg at a street market. You would behave in exactly the opposite way."

COSTS CAN BE IMPORTANT – BUT VALUE IS MORE SO

You might be tempted to plump automatically for an investment fund with the lowest charges.

This might turn out to be a good move – but equally, paying a little more for the best investment manager could result in much better returns. The actions of a decent fund manager could more than compensate you for the higher charges.

Commercial sector greets opportunity presented by first business roadshow

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE Business Growth Show made its mid-Kent debut at The Orchards Conference Centre in East Malling, attracting companies from across the commercial sector.

There are now more than 40 such events each year around the UK and each is a business-to-business roadshow that offers decision-makers the opportunity to grow their business by networking with forward-thinking, dynamic delegates.

Being non-industry-specific, companies from all backgrounds find new, inventive ways to help their business grow, discover new suppliers, reduce costs and gain industry knowledge from expert exhibitors.

The show featured topics such as the works of economic guru QJ The Inspirationist – 'How to turn your creativity into cash' – and growth adviser Ian George's work '18 secrets super-successful business owners know and do, that most business owners either don't know or don't do'.

There were also speed-networking sessions, business stands, 20 expert exhibitors and some 100 delegates.

Local and national businesses attended, including Barclaycard Merchant Systems, The Intellectual Property Office and Creditsafe.

Event director Ian James said: "We were delighted with our very first Maidstone show. The Business Growth Shows are unique in being intimate business networking roadshows, not major foot-slogging exhibitions.

"Our longest-established shows around the UK regularly achieve around our maximum of 40 exhibitors and 250 delegates, so this was an extremely good start for us."

Delegate Philippa Monger, from

Liquid Computing, said she "really enjoyed the show and met some very useful contacts", while Rick Fuggle, from Aegle, said he "enjoyed the show and the networking very much".

Each event held under the Business Growth Show banner supports a regional charity, with the Maidstone show helping The Kent Foundation For Young Entrepreneurs, which had a free exhibition stand to attract mentors to enable young people to achieve for themselves.

"We were delighted to support the foundation to help the young people from Kent start and grow a business," said James.

The next show for the mid-Kent region will be on Tuesday, November 27, in Tunbridge Wells.

Phone Ian James for details on 020 8300 7584, email ian@thebusinessgrowthshow.co.uk or see www.thebusinessgrowthshow.co.uk.

REDEVELOPMENT

Council's go-ahead for £10m development could herald brighter future for Orpington

PLANS for a £10 million retail and leisure development in Orpington that could create up to 130 jobs have been approved by Bromley Council.

The decision gives the green light to development of The Walnuts shopping centre to include a seven-screen cinema, retail and restaurant units and a new and improved public square.

The 950-seat cinema will be the first in Orpington in 30 years as part of the investment project.

Peter Dean, chairman of the development control committee, which gave the go-ahead, said: "This is a high-quality scheme which will provide much-improved leisure facilities in the heart of Orpington town centre.

"The scheme will enhance the public amenities in the area and provide a good mix of retail and leisure. The committee unanimously agreed it will greatly benefit Orpington."

The Miller Developments scheme includes plans to relocate the existing market to the adjacent College Square, plant two mature walnut trees and create a glazed frontage for the cinema lobby to provide visual interest.

It is intended to complete the project by the end of 2013.

Peter Morgan, executive councillor for renewal and recreation, said: "This landmark development shows a positive step forward for Orpington town centre and expands on our vision to 'Build A Better Bromley'.

"The scheme will not only bring 130 new jobs to the area but will also increase vital footfall, ensuring the vitality of the area and benefiting existing businesses and residents."

The scheme is in line with the council's plan to raise Orpington's profile and improve facilities. This has included the £2.2m high-street improvements, with vacancy levels in shops improving by 3 per cent.

Economic boost for cathedral city as report shows rise in new companies

CANTERBURY district has seen a record-breaking number of new company registrations in the first half of the year, according to the quarterly Duport Business Confidence Report for the area, with 265 new companies starting trading.

The study uses public records and data from Companies House to record the number of new businesses starting out and those closing down. During the first six months of 2012, there was an increase of 2.3 per cent in the number of company formations in the city.

There was more good news for the local economy with a further drop in company closures. These reached an all-time high of 257 in the first half of 2009, when the worse effects of the recession were being felt.

Numbers have been dropping steadily since then, with only 139 company closures in the first half of this year.

Canterbury district retains some 4,700 businesses, with up to 60,000 full- and part-time employees.

Unemployment in the city has dropped significantly since 2001, due to the opening of the Whitefriars shopping complex, which created thousands of job opportunities. The city also benefits from a healthy tourist trade, with more than a million visitors every year.

Peter Valaitis, managing director of Duport.co.uk, said: "Canterbury is a thriving place which, although not completely unscathed by the recession, is doing well despite tough economic conditions. The record number of company formations set up in the first half of this year points towards an economy that looks set to continue growing in years to come."

He added that the unique nature of Canterbury's tourist offering, together with a healthy economy and low unemployment, should provide a solid economic base for the future.

Young chef hopes online scheme is the recipe for a thriving career

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

WITH youth unemployment a cause for national concern, and ways to harness and develop young people's enthusiasm and potential always a matter for discussion, one Kent business has benefited from a new Government scheme.

The Secret Garden restaurant at Mersham-le-Hatch has taken on two apprentices to work in its kitchen after they applied for vacancies online.

A website allows those looking to gain an apprenticeship to register on the internet and create a home page detailing areas of interest and their own qualifications.

Young people can also search for opportunities with companies that have themselves registered at www.apprenticeships.org.uk, and would-be applicants can browse the online information looking for appropriate choices.

The Government set up the programme in a bid to put young people in touch with companies and vice versa in a bid to create job opportunities.

Jack Crust, 17, from Ashford, is training to be a chef under the scheme. He said: "I thought I'd done as much as I could at school, so I looked at the site and the opportunities for a career in catering that were out there.

"I've always been interested in catering and thought I'd give it a go. I learnt some things at school, which helped, but now watching and learning in the workplace has given me a whole lot more skills."

At The Secret Garden the apprentices work alongside chefs in general kitchen duties, but they are also entrusted with creating recipes from the basic ingredients.

"It's challenging, but the help and advice is there when I need it," said Jack.

Stephanie Wanstall, owner of the business, said: "It is about training the next generation of chefs," she said.

"Practical experience is in my view more valuable than learning on a course, and all our chefs are very keen to help the young people, who in turn bring energy and enthusiasm to the working environment."

FOOD

Thai's the limit as restaurant group focuses on expansion

THE Giggling Squid Thai restaurant group, which has premises in Tunbridge Wells and three Sussex towns, has announced it intends to be the first national chain to specialise in Thai food.

Four more restaurant openings are planned this year – and the target is for 50 more in the next five years.

Sites around the M25 are being looked into, including one in Sevenoaks, as, unlike many other countries whose food is popular in the UK, there is no large-scale business opening venues.

The company's bosses say they want to explore affluent areas in which to open branches of the restaurant – but they also emphasised the food served would all be as genuine as possible and reflect the tastes and flavours of the Far East.

Andy Laurillard owns the chain with his wife Pranee.

He said: "The thing about Thai food is that you can't make it in a factory – you have to make it with chefs on site.

"There are just over 1,500 Thai restaurants across the UK and we've eaten in lots of them and I can't think of anywhere that gets near the peaks of Thai cuisine I've experienced in Thailand."

The restaurants' signature dish is called giggling squid – a steamed baby squid filled with minced chicken with basil and chilli.

Tapas-style dishes are also on offer.

Networking event gets day off to an enterprising start

BUSINESS-OWNERS and executives from across The Weald flocked to Tenterden's biggest business networking breakfast, which was hailed as a great event.

Organised by the Wealden Business Group and held at The Little Silver Country Hotel in Tenterden, the open day was designed to help local businesses meet potential new customers and professional contacts.

More than 75 members and guests attended.

WBG chairman Richard Harvey said: "It was a terrific morning and a real example of what business networking can achieve – helping local business to succeed, and stimulating growth."

Magnificent seven have warm glow from heating company's community initiative

SWALE Heating has taken on seven apprentices as part of a community initiative in partnership with clients AmicusHorizon and East Kent Housing.

The youngsters have embarked on plumbing and administration apprenticeships with Swale Heating at its Sittingbourne headquarters.

Matt Hobbs, client and resident liaison manager at Swale Heating, explained that the apprentices all live in social-housing properties owned by the two associations.

They were chosen after a selection process was agreed with housing association client AmicusHorizon and also East Kent Housing, which was set up by Canterbury, Dover, Shepway and Thanet councils to help improve housing services for tenants.

Hobbs said: "Applicants, who are all residents of AmicusHorizon and East Kent Housing, needed to apply and attend an open day at our offices, for Amicus Horizon tenants, while East Kent Housing arranged an open day in Canterbury.

NEW START: The seven apprentices

"Applicants were given details of the apprenticeships on offer and we outlined the required skills and what we were looking for. They also undertook a brief written test, which was used to progress to the next stage, where the successful candidates were interviewed, given a further written test and scored based upon their answers.

"The apprenticeships are two years initially, qualifying them as plumbers with an NVQ Level 2.

"Those that show the correct aptitude and skills after this will progress to train and ultimately become gas engineers.

"They are paid and employed by us, initially on a two-year contract, and there will be a job for all successful candidates after this.

"Swale Heating celebrates its 40th anniversary this year and I can't think of a better way to help mark this special year than by giving these opportunities to youngsters from the local community."

College playing its part to train new engineers

A REPORT by the Royal Academy of Engineering has warned that there are not enough engineers in the UK to support the economic recovery.

The UK would need a minimum of 100,000 science, technology, engineering and maths (STEM) graduates a year to maintain the status quo.

North West Kent College says it is eager to help young people progress with their education and to ultimately find employment. With a job market scarce of engineering graduates, the college is keen to make the local community aware of the potential job opportunities that could help to reduce unemployment rates.

An Autumn Fast Track programme is offered across the college and for all of the engineering courses, which will begin on November 5.

The fast track programme is designed to help young people who feel they have made the wrong choice about their education, and is giving them the opportunity to change their mind and come to college.

The college says it has an extensive engineering department with courses including electrical and electronic engineering, refrigeration and air conditioning, plumbing and mechanical engineering. The college also offers Higher National Diplomas/Certificates (HND/C) and Higher Apprenticeships in electrical and electronic engineering as well as apprenticeships in most of the engineering disciplines.

Curriculum manager for engineering Scott Wilkins, said: "We offer a great provision that enables students to progress from entry level all the way through to higher education.

"The benefit is that they get hands on experience as well as the theory side, which sets our students up for both further study and the engineering industry."

Legal training leads to full-time jobs at law firm

TUNBRIDGE Wells law firm Cripps Harries Hall LLP, has announced that four newly qualified solicitors have taken up permanent positions at the firm, having completed their two-year training contracts.

In addition, seven new trainees joined the firm last month September, with a view to landing own permanent roles in 2014.

The firm says the programme is evidence of its long-standing commitment to investing in talent and growing legal expertise within the business.

Among the newly-qualified solicitors, James Blyth has taken up a position in commercial dispute resolution, Erin Gilman has joined the corporate team, Sarah Crowell has taken a role focused on planning and dispute resolution, and Hannah Harris has joined the employment team.

The new trainee solicitors include William Bishop, Rachel Garland, Lorna-Jane Gittings, Laura Jones, Will Leney, Dino Sikket and Mireille Turner. All have joined Cripps on a two-year training contract, each sitting with different practice teams on a four-month rotation, allowing them to develop their interests and their potential future legal specialisations.

Cripps' managing partner, Jonathan Denny, said: "It has long been our policy to train bright graduates and retain them on qualification, and we have maintained this programme throughout these challenging times."

Could your businesses take on an apprentice?

KENT businesses are benefiting from the talents of young people by taking on apprentices.

More than 280 apprentice places have been pledged by companies throughout the county and Kent County Council is looking for more businesses that would benefit from funding to help hire an apprentice.

New Look Tiling, in Maidstone had a visit from Kent County Council leader Cllr Paul Carter to meet Anthony Ashton, 19, who has just started an apprenticeship.

Owner Martin Rose said: "I have built up my business to a stage where I could often do with a hand, so the apprentice scheme couldn't have come at a better time for me. I found the whole process straight forward too, a lot can be done online.

"Anthony is a real asset, helping with all the running around and lifting, he's picking up new skills daily, which makes my life easier.

"Everyone has to start somewhere and it's good to give young people a chance.

"Young people are the future and they need to learn their skills from somewhere. He gets a qualification and it also provides me with help. Give a young person a chance, they might surprise you."

Cllr Carter added: "Every business in Kent can benefit from taking on an apprentice. Kent County Council has put aside £2 million to fund the Kent Employment Programme.

"Businesses receive £2,000 for each young person they take on if they have been out of work for three months or more. The team can also help companies access national funding to bring the costs down further.

"These funding opportunities can bring the costs for businesses down to as little as £52 a week. Kent is on target to have created an additional 900 new apprentices by 2014 thanks to companies like New Look Tiling."

Firms interested in taking on an apprentice can go to www.kent.gov.uk/kentjobs4kyp, phone 0800 101 8224, or email kep@kent.gov.uk.

Teenage shop assistant Ruby is a first for homeware giant Cath Kidston

HIGH street favourite Cath Kidston has teamed up with Canterbury College to launch its first employee apprenticeship programme.

Ruby Streek, 16, from Faversham, became the retail chain's first apprentice when she began a Level 2 in retail skills qualification at the college.

Ruby, who has been working at Cath Kidston's Canterbury branch since the start of September, will spend one day every three weeks at the college learning about everything from approaching and advising customers, to creating sales-boosting shop displays.

She said: "This is great for me because when I left school I couldn't choose whether to go to college or get a full-time job. Being able to do a few days at college and apply it to the workplace really appealed to me.

"I feel a level of responsibility to live up to knowing I'm Cath Kidston's first apprentice but it's going well and I'm enjoying it."

Ruby has a day of lessons at the college once every three weeks, with a final exam in April. Completion of the course could lead onto a Level 3 in retail skills qualification.

The college's retail skills tutor Sarah Cooper said: "Ruby's got to be able to approach customers and sell to them. For a 16-year-old that can be hard to do, and this will be a real confidence booster for her.

"Everything Ruby learns here she can take to the shop floor where it will become second nature."

Cath Kidston is working with the college's Canterbury Retail Skills Shop which delivers courses specifically designed for those working in the retail sector. These include apprenticeships, customer service retail management courses, and the new Mary Portas Guide to Successful Retailing.

The college's business account executive, Yolanda Levina, said: "When we approached Cath Kidston about working together Ruby had just started as a Saturday girl. The manager was keen to offer her an opportunity to grow within the organisation.

"Canterbury College had just become the only college in the area to be awarded National Skills Academy for Retail status and we were able to enrol her onto the retail apprenticeship programme.

"We are very proud and excited to work with Cath Kidston."

Art college helps pupils learn to enjoy the Big Draw

SCHOOLCHILDREN are being encouraged to pick up a pencil and draw thanks to a special collaboration between the University for the Creative Arts (UCA) and Turner Contemporary.

Students from UCA Maidstone are taking over the Margate gallery's regular weekend workshops during October for the national Big Draw campaign.

The sessions are on Saturdays and Sundays from 1-4pm in the gallery's Learning Studio.

Subject leader in fine art at UCA, Grant Petrey, said: "We are proud to be working with Turner Contemporary as part of the Big Draw campaign because we want encourage youngsters to find new ways of creative thinking and learning, while also expressing themselves and gaining a new understanding of the world around them."

"We hope that a wider message of the importance of community, collaboration and creative fun is spread via Turner Contemporary and UCA students and connect people in a positive way."

Launched as a one-day event in 2000, the Big Draw is now the world's biggest annual celebration of drawing, lasting a full month. Every October, museums, galleries, heritage sites, libraries, schools and parks join in.

The month-long UCA workshops will also benefit the students leading them.

Mr Petrey said: "It is important that our students experience the art world beyond the confines of UCA and are able to make use of the skills they're being given so they can better understand how they are connected to a wider community of practice."

"The workshops give a wide range of students, from different year groups and courses, the opportunity to come together to work constructively with other artists in a gallery environment and also to contextualise what they do for a public audience."

The gallery's learning officer Keiko Higashi, said: "Turner Contemporary is passionate about getting young people interested in art so the Big Draw campaign is an ideal project for us to support."

Rugby victory for young Oliver

A SPECIAL presentation has been held at Maidstone Rugby Club to celebrate the club's new change kit designed by Oliver Ralph, a Year 8 student at Cornwallis Academy in the county town.

Oliver was presented with a shirt and framed copy of his design. The first team wore the new kit in their opening home game of the season and each shirt has been printed with 'Designed by Oliver Ralph' on the back.

Earlier this year Cornwallis Academy and MRC forged an exciting partnership in order to promote the sport and create opportunities for young player participation and development.

To launch the commencement of this formal collaboration, Cornwallis students were invited to submit designs for MRC's new change strip, which will also be adopted as the new academy strip.

The competition received more than 500 entries and Oliver's design was picked as the overall winner.

Students set new fundraising record for Royal National Institute of Blind People BUSINESS students at MidKent College raised a record-breaking sum of money for the Royal National Institute of Blind People.

A quiz night, raffle, cake sale, auction and blind football competition, were among the activities held to raise £1,307 for the charity – more than double what has been collected in previous years.

But the grand total was even higher thanks to a late £750 donation from ED&F Man in recognition of the students' hard work.

RNIB fundraiser Eileen Haffenden accepted a cheque

CASH: Student fundraisers Sarah Berridge and Mitch Ivory from the Maidstone campus students at a presentation.

She said: "They all really embraced this project and the charity is so thankful for everything they've done."

"When I walked into the quiz night earlier this year I was blown away by the professionalism of it all. I wish the students all the very best for the future."

The students who organised the fundraising were all on the Level 3 Extended Diploma in Business course.

MidKent College also offers higher education courses in business management and entrepreneurship.

(TOUCAN CROSSING)*ROAD TRAFFIC REGULATION ACT 1984

NOTICE is hereby given that the Kent County Council, in exercise of its powers under Section 23 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 and all other enabling powers, intends to install a Toucan Crossing on Scanlons Bridge Road, Hythe, Kent. The Toucan Crossing is to replace the existing uncontrolled crossing which is approximately 80 metres north of its junction with Dymchurch Road

The purpose of the scheme is to provide a safe place for pedestrians and cyclists to cross as there are concerns over safety within the area. The existing pedestrian island is used by an increased number of cyclists, school children and shoppers using nearby facilities and a high population from the surrounding residential housing estates.

Toucan Crossings are designed for both pedestrians and cyclists and are typically used adjacent to a shared use footway (Cyclists are not allowed to cross the road using Zebra, Pelican or Puffin crossings). There is a green cycle symbol alongside the green man and the crossing time is established each time by on-crossing detectors. The pedestrians and cyclists in the area would therefore benefit from the introduction of a Toucan Crossing to assist with the high pedestrian / cycle movements throughout the area.

Jacobs Engineering UK LTD. has been commissioned by the Council to publish the Notice of intent at the same time as providing notification to all interested parties and complies with the requirements of Section 23(2) of the Road Traffic Regulation Act, 1984.

Copies of the plan showing this proposal an explanatory statement and a map showing the extents of the scheme may be inspected during normal office hours at

THE INTERVIEW

Van Morrison

Not fame or money... I do this for love

MUSIC legend Van Morrison takes to the stage at Canterbury's Marlowe theatre this month, bringing both timeless classics and songs from his new album Born To Sing: No Plan B to the cathedral city.

A veteran of the business, his 'Celtic soul' music has its roots in jazz and blues, with albums such as Moondance and Astral Weeks acknowledged as among the most influential ever recorded.

Morrison, originally from Belfast, met BBC Radio presenter John Bennett in his home city to talk about his new work – and started off by explaining its title.

"It seems people have a lot of questions about that," he said. "There isn't really any question. Born To Sing: No Plan B. It is what it says it is. There's no hidden meaning or anything. I don't know why people are always looking for hidden meanings or something else.

"It is what it says on the tin. Singing is my profession. There is no Plan B. Maybe there might be one later on, I don't know."

Morrison outlined his influences and how he most respected musicians who took total control of their work.

"Ray Charles was my role model and he always said he did everything. It's all music and he did everything and he reinvented a couple of things, too, while he was at it."

"And there were guys like Bobby Darin who did everything.

"I mean, Bobby Darin was song-writing before anybody even knew what that was, but he could also do other stuff. He could do folk, he could do Frank Sinatra, you know, so there's people like that who covered all the bases."

Morrison explained that he left his songs open to interpretation from listeners

"Whatever people want to take out of it, that's it," he said.

"Everybody has got their own interpretation of what they are going to take out of any song. Whether that be nostalgia and they remember where they were, or it reminds them of something else, everyone has got their own interpretation of what they are going to take out of any given song.

"I mean, if you have a painting, 20 people can look at that painting and go 'It's about this'

He's Van the Man to his adoring millions... and the legend is coming to Canterbury or 'It's about that'. It's what you get out of it. That's what it's about.

"So these are ideas – people are going to take out of them what they need or what they want and if they don't need it they are not going to take it, they won't buy into it, but obviously they want to get something that they can put their interpretation on. That's the whole point, I think, of songs."

The second track on the album has the unusual title Going Down To Monte Carlo.

"It seems very strange that you could go to Monte Carlo and find peace, but yeah, hey, that happened to me.

"For one thing, nobody cares. They are too busy with their own lives and they have enough money, so nobody really gives a damn about who you are, really, so that's part of it.

"They're not going to approach you because they are all kind of stars in their own way, so I can be anonymous there.

"Anonymity – people don't realise what a gift it is. They don't realise what they have. People wanting to be famous, they don't know what they're getting into. Anonymity is a gift from God and people don't realise what they have."

Morrison says that commitment to music comes with a "sting".

"The sting is fame because you're not told about that when they tell you 'You were singing in the pram and your granny used to sing these little Scottish melodies to you' and you think 'Yeah, well, that makes sense', but you don't know about all this other crap that you're getting into when you're starting out. When you're starting out, you have no idea.

"See, I've always done this because I love the music. It's like what they say about jazz. You don't do jazz for money, you do it for love.

"Same kind of thing, I'm doing this for love. Not fame, not money, and that's always been the thing – that's why I got into it because I heard people and they did something to me.

LOST IN MUSIC: Van Morrison is still going strong

"They changed my consciousness, they changed my thinking. Something changed within me when I heard these people. So I was like 'Yeah, that's what I want to do because I love it. I want to do that because that is something really...' I don't know what it is. Spiritual?

"It's something that takes you somewhere else, so that's why I want to do it. But it has taken me into these other areas.

"I've tried to do it without getting into these areas, but because of where we are in history and because we have all this internet, all these magazines, all this hype like fashion, fame, it's only recent. All of this stuff is very recent.

"People used to be into music in my day. They didn't care if someone was like wearing a shiny jacket or something, so people usually got into it.

"Why? Because they loved the music. If you wanted to do it, you had to love it. It was all focused on the music if you were doing what I was doing. It wasn't focused on anything else.

"So that became manipulated by 'Oh yeah, blues. We can sell that!' I came in on that. People tend to forget that's where I came in, as a blues singer. The guy that came from London to The Maritime [Morrison's R&B club in Belfast], he came to hear a blues singer and they wanted to sign a band that had a blues singer.

"So that was my calling card. This is all forgotten now, but that's the reality of how I got to make records. They wanted to sign a blues singer from Belfast. They had several from London, one from Newcastle, a few from other places and they wanted one from here.

"I was doing that music because I loved it. Nobody else here was doing it – they didn't want to know. That's the way it was. It was a different world.

"How many people from that era, apart from The Beatles, can you now name? There were hundreds and hundreds of people and a lot of them were really good. You used to see guys in Germany that were amazing.

"Where are they now? You never hear about them. You only hear about the ones that made it."

An Indian less ordinary, but maybe on another evening

There is an unfounded tradition that if you've had one curry, you've pretty much had them all. 'There's a good curry house in town' is almost as common currency as 'We'll meet up for a beer and a curry', the former equating in truth to no more than there's an Indian restaurant nearby. The 'good' means little if anything, too few people making the effort to differentiate.

And so it was to Curry Leaf that I ventured with a friend on a rainy Thursday night in Ashford (an unpromising backdrop, granted). Late work commitments had caused the abandonment of our initial choice, while, once in town, we learnt that our former Indian venue of choice had metamorphosed into a Thai.

No matter, my pal assured he knew of "a good Indian" in another part of town, although his partner had suffered "a bad meal" on the last visit. A mere blip, he was certain.

Well, we didn't get a rubbish meal. I've had bad Indian food... stand up the place in Barry Island that served all members of our party near-identical splurges of cochineal-heavy muck that tasted much the same whether they were korma or vindaloo.

No, Curry Leaf is not from that pod, but did it serve something a little special, a little out of the ordinary that would demand return visits? Sadly, it didn't. Indeed, I left feeling a touch disappointed. Not horrified, not angered, just a little dissatisfied.

It's hard to say why. The food wasn't particularly badly cooked, while the menu – apart from informing us that the place was under new management and had a new chef and was itself new – offered a number of dishes I hadn't encountered before. Always a good sign and suggestive of the fact that some thought has gone into its composition.

It was, of course, nobody's fault but mine that

I hadn't brought my reading glasses and so struggled to make out quite how many choices lay before me, but here's a tip here for all restaurants – nip out and get a cheap pair for those of us too vain or too dozy to bring our own.

In the event, we shared both our mixed starters and king prawn prozapot (think 'butterfly king prawn' anywhere else), which were both OK.

And OK it remained throughout. My pal seemed content with his lamb rogan and pilau rice, but my duck mirch with mushroom rice didn't stir any great joy in my inner self, the rice being a particular let-down, so much so that I barely half-finished it (and this a dish that I sometimes take in double portions).

The keema naan needed more meat, while the sides of mushroom bhaji and saag aloo disappointed. There, that word again, but know what? I want to go back because flicking again through the menu, this time with glasses on, I know, just know, from the range of dishes at Curry Leaf that this place can lift itself above the ordinary. Don't let me down!

A restaurant keeping to cooking Kentish

SPECIALIST local-cuisine restaurant Curiously Kentish opened at The Goods Shed food hall and farmers' market in Canterbury this week.

The restaurant is the brainchild of Jason Freedman, a county native who is also the owner and head chef of The Minnis restaurant at Birchington. He said that he was opening the venue because of his passion for quality local ingredients and preserving Kent cuisine.

Curiously Kentish will make its own dishes from local ingredients using Kentish culinary influence. Traditional recipes will utilise ancient preserving techniques such as curing or smoking and feature anything from salt-beef sandwiches to cured hams and local salami.

The Ambrette is keen to spread its wings

HIGHLY-rated Indian fine-dining restaurant The Ambrette is to expand from its sites in Margate and Rye.

Chef-patron Dev Biswal has revealed plans to expand his culinary concept to six sites in the South East and London, including at Tunbridge Wells, Sevenoaks, Canterbury and Guildford.

The Ambrette at Rye, which opened in December last year, is already fully booked throughout the week for lunch and dinner and Biswal believes he has found the winning formula for the restaurant:

"It's a combination of the location, the style and concept of food that we're offering."

EATING OUT

Across the county

The birds sing in praise of a good country pub

THE Bush Blackbird & Thrush is a 15th-century country pub full of character and a good atmosphere.

Surrounded by the rolling fields of Kent, the eatery creates fine home-cooked food for customers and offers a selection of top local and national ales straight from the barrel.

The team at the Bush Blackbird use only British meats in their dishes, which are locally sourced whenever possible.

Impressively, the kitchen staff even grow their own vegetables, taking them fresh from the patch and on to the plate. The huge garden for families to enjoy is always a big draw – or you can just experience a nice, relaxing beverage or good meal after a long walk through the countryside.

There is plenty of parking, as well as disabled facilities, and the establishment allows dogs on the premises.

The team has catered for car rallies and large events, so get in touch if there is a celebration coming up and you're looking for a venue.

There is a quiz night every Tuesday and live bands and music every month at this East Peckham venue.

It may be cold outside but there's plenty to keep the chill at bay at the Waggon at Hale, which has a range of events to fire the autumn

Halloween and fireworks light up a Waggon autumn

THE Waggon at Hale is an independent, family-run business that prides itself on giving all guests a warm welcome.

You can dine in the formal restaurant for lunch, evening meals and the very popular Sunday roast, or you can relax on a comfy sofa in front of the fire and enjoy a drink, a snack or indeed something more substantial from the bar menu. The progressive pub hosts many events throughout the year, from wine-tasting to gourmet meals and quiz nights to live music... there is always something going on.

The team prides itself on being family-friendly, offering a warm and friendly atmosphere to all customers; there is a wide range of real ales and wine. However, the unique feature is a small animal farm comprising rabbits, guinea pigs, chickens and the star of the show, Cracking the micro pig, for guests of all ages to come along and meet.

It is renowned for good, honest, home-cooked British pub grub using locally-sourced produce, with a sprinkling of popular world dishes. There is a large family garden with a patio and children's play area, along with the farm.

The team, which is also available to cater for big events like wedding receptions and business conferences, is available from Monday to Saturday, midday to 11pm, and in winter on Sundays from midday to 8pm.

Food is served between midday and 9pm Monday to Saturday and until 6pm on Sundays.

Look out for a couple of big events in the next few weeks as the ghosts and witches of Halloween jump aboard the Waggon.

On Wednesday, October 31, the Halloween horror gourmet meal will be available. Join in for a night of Halloween-themed food, including six courses served with a glass of wine or cocktail for only £24.95 per person. And being Halloween, fancy-dress is preferred. Booking is required with a £5 deposit – the horror gourmet night starts at 8pm.

But the autumnal festivities don't stop there as just two days later, on Friday, November 2, the Waggon continues with a night of fright, Halloween and fireworks party.

Tuck into an outdoor winter BBQ (wrap up warm!) and enjoy live music, face-painting for the children and themed cocktails for the adults. There will also be a bonfire as well as a children's Halloween trick-or-treat hunt from 7pm. The fireworks display will start at 8pm.

Short-listed Luke is more than a boy as competition heats up

ACCLAIMED 18-year-old singer-songwriter Luke Jackson has been selected as a finalist in the 2013 BBC Radio 2 Folk Awards.

Jackson, who launched his debut album More Than Boys at Shrewsbury Folk Festival last month, has been named as one of 10 finalists in the national radio station's annual search for the UK's most talented young performers of folk, roots or acoustic music.

Previous competitors and winners include Tim van Eyken, Jackie Oates, Jim Moray, Bella Hardy, Uiscedwr, Moore Moss Rutter and Jarlath Henderson.

Finalists will take part in workshops at the Young Folk Award Weekend before performing in a public concert hosted by DJ Mike Harding.

A panel of judges will select four nominees for the 2013 BBC Radio 2 Young Folk Award and the eventual winner will be announced at the BBC Radio 2 Folk Awards ceremony early next year.

The winners' prizes include the opportunity to record a session for Radio 2 and perform at top UK festivals in 2013, including the prestigious

TALENTED: Luke Jackson

Cambridge Folk Festival.

With a bold voice and honed guitar skills, Canterbury-based Jackson is a confident performer, having already supported groups like Show Of Hands, Steve Knightley and Boo Hewerdine.

The singer has also appeared as a guest on BBC Radio 2's Good Morning Sunday, interviewed by Aled Jones. His 11-track debut album is a riff-layered CD that draws inspiration from memories of childhood camaraderie; a lyrical real-time journey to young adulthood.

This summer Jackson was selected from some 1,000 entries as a finalist in the Beautiful Days Festival Singer Songwriter Competition, organised in conjunction with Acoustic Magazine.

Marlene happy to (still) bare all as she returns to Calendar Girls role

By Joe Bill

joe.bill@archant.co.uk

SHE is probably best known for her flirtatious meetings with Derek Trotter, but the woman behind Marlene Boyce is ready to bare all... again.

Sue Holderness returns to Kent in her fourth stint as part of the Calendar Girls team and the cool winter air has done nothing to discourage the former Only Fools And Horses star from getting her kit off.

She said: "I love it and the best thing is that the cast is almost the same as one I have toured with before. So it's a bit like coming home – we all know each other well."

"It is an extraordinary show. There are moments when the audience will be uncontrollably laughing and other, rather gentler, more moving, times."

The show, which has also been made into a film, is based on the true story of a group from the Women's Institute in Yorkshire who pose nude for a calendar to raise money for cancer treatments.

"I think all of us have been touched by cancer. So there are moments people find very emotional."

"You hear at the end that these extraordinary women have now raised around £4million for leukaemia research, so there are people out there whose lives have been saved by this incredible story."

CHARITABLE LADIES: The Calendar Girls story has been acted out both on stage and silver screen

But, of course, to play the role the actresses have to strip in front of the wandering eyes of the audience.

"I remember the first time we all got together before the 2009 tour – it was the very day I got my senior bus pass. I was thinking 'What am I doing here? I am an Old Age Pensioner taking my clothes off in front of people I've never met.'"

The show itself is choreographed brilliantly and the audience get the idea that they see much more than they do.

"The stage-hands, of course, see everything, but they long ago stopped looking, which I suppose is slightly depressing."

Holderness will be forever remembered as the long-suffering wife of south London wide-boy Boycie in John Sullivan's classic sitcom, a typecast that the actress looks back on fondly.

"People still call out the Marlene catchphrase and even do the Boycie laugh. When that stops, I will be incredibly sad – I love it. And because it's still on TV all the time there's a whole new generation of fans who are watching it now."

"I always used to switch off, but they are so far away now that I don't think about how I could have done that better, because it's too late."

"There are still episodes I haven't seen. Now it's far enough away, so I actually watch and think 'I didn't look bad' because at the time you think you were too fat or ugly, but now, 20 years on, I wish I had realised I didn't look bad back then!"

■ Calendar Girls plays at the Assembly Hall Theatre at Tunbridge Wells from Monday to Saturday, October 22-27. Visit www.assemblyhalltheatre.co.uk.

Always go native for wildlife

LUCY'S PATCH

by LUCY HEWETT

VERY soon now, the leaves will be falling from the trees and we will be entering the planting season.

These next five months, the dormant season to the end of March, is the time when it's best to do your tree- and shrub-planting. Getting the majority in before Christmas is the ideal, as the roots will have time to settle before spring.

If you are thinking of planting a hedge, please consider a native hedge as they are home to a host of plants and animals that improve our environment considerably. Stock plants are cheap if you buy them bare-rooted in bundles of 10.

A plain hawthorn hedge is great, but for diversity use it as a 50 per cent foundation and weave into the mix wild rose, hazel, wild cornus, guelder rose and wild privet. These additions will provide a range of flowers and berries to attract the birds and add seasonal interest. For the fastest results, plant a double row, staggered a foot apart, with about five plants per metre.

Cut the young whips back by half to help promote denser growth from the base. Whether you are planting natives or a crisper, more culti-

SUMMER HARVEST: To be sure of a good crop next year, now is the time to plant your raspberries and bone per square metre, and keep the base of the hedge weed-free with a mulch or mulch mat. Obviously, winter planting will reduce the need for watering but, if you can, try to water still once a month between now and April.

As it is the time for cutting faded stems, try not to be too overzealous with the autumn clear-up as a wealth of plants comes into its own in the winter. Hydrangea heads, bleached-out ornamental grasses and the skeletons of perennials such as sedum and eryngium are not only of interest aesthetically but also provide cover and habitat for over-wintering insects.

Leaves can be left in the beds, where plants are robust enough to cope with the natural mulch, but remove them from small perennials and Mediterranean herbs that like the air around them to keep them from rotting in winter.

Also, pick up diseased leaves from the base of roses to stop them harbouring blackspot. Buddleia, clematis, wisteria and anything potentially tender should be left until the back end of winter to avoid die-back in hard frosts.

Jobs to do this month

Check variegated shrubs for plain green shoots and prune them away.

Mow lawns on dry days with the blades on a high setting.

Send off for mail-order seed catalogues and start preparing your planting wish list.

Continue/finish planting up your spring-flowering bulbs, including tulips, as soon as possible, preferably before the ground loses the heat of the summer. Winter wet in combination with cold is the biggest killer on heavy soils. Throw a handful of bulbs and plant them where they fall to create a natural drift effect. The general rule of thumb for planting is that two to three times the size of the bulb is the depth you need to dig.

Wrap outside taps with insulation material to prevent them freezing.

Order loads of farmyard manure or mushroom compost to use over winter.

In the fruit and veg patch

- If you have not opted to plant green manure, as suggested last month, in any bare veg beds, dig and manure veg beds with some organic matter instead – this will greatly improve soil structure.

- Insulate your greenhouse with polythene.

- Check fruit in storage and remove any that are showing signs of rot.

- Pruning: as soon as the leaves are down, you can start to winter prune fruit – please refer to RHS The Fruit Garden Display for reference as this is a reasonably complex exercise. However, stone fruit should never be pruned in the winter as the sap is being drawn back into the trees and the airborne spores of silver leaf can be drawn back into the vascular system at the same time.

- Sow hardy peas such as Douce Provence.

- Plant out wallflowers, forget-me-nots, pansies and other spring bedding.

- For raspberries next summer, plant bushes now – try Autumn Bliss or Joan J and have yourself a double crop of sweet fruits; instead of cutting down all the canes in winter, only cut half to give you a summer and autumn crop.

The winter months shouldn't be all gloom and doom, although my Terry definitely thinks it is and every day insists on telling me how much earlier it has got darker than the day before.

Bring some colour and beautiful scent into your home in time for Christmas by forcing scented narcissus Paperwhites indoors: settle bulbs on a layer of glass marbles or pebbles in clear vases and keep water levels just below the base of the bulbs.

I am sure you will be grateful of these sweet-smelling pretty lovelies in the depths of winter.

Warm glow of saving money

AN innovative radiator reflector that could save big money on household heating bills is now on the market. The Radflek – which reflects radiator heat that would otherwise be lost back into a room – has now received an Energy Saving Trust Recommended label.

Most radiators direct some 40 per cent of their radiated heat towards the wall behind. Radflek reflects this heat back into the room – primarily into the radiator – so that the radiator maintains its operating temperature using less energy with a lower load on the boiler.

Elaine Berry, of the Energy Savings Trust, said: "Having an efficient and cost-effective heating system is one of the main steps you can take to reduce your energy consumption and carbon-dioxide emissions, and Radflek radiator reflectors are an excellent means of helping your radiators work more efficiently."

Michael Watson, Radflek chief executive, said: "Thousands of householders are facing significant gas and electricity price rises as a raft of cheap energy deals come to an end, and price increases across the big six energy suppliers are expected in October. With winter looming and the fact that many houses in Britain do not retain heat well, now is the time to get Radflek behind your radiators."

Dave Hoffman recently installed the device in his three-bedroom, semi-detached house in Aylesford.

The property had been built just 10 years earlier and was already well insulated. However, rising energy bills led Mr Hoffman to look for other ways to make his heating more efficient and economical.

He said: "I think most people are looking for ways to save money and there are several things one can do at home to improve energy efficiency. It seemed logical to me that it would be more efficient to redirect the radiator heat that is going backwards, so I found Radflek as a solution."

"The great thing about Radflek is we felt the results immediately: as soon as I put them behind the radiators, we could feel more heat coming in to the room and we were able to turn the thermostat down. Radflek is clearly saving us money on our heating bills."

HOT STUFF: The Radflek reflects the heat from your radiator back into the room

... and fitting solar panels can help, too

RESEARCH reveals how almost 5 million people living in the South East have no idea how much they might expect to save on their total energy bill by installing solar panels.

The average annual saving per household is estimated at £830.47 and homeowners also add value to their property by investing in the solar panels.

Meanwhile, almost 50,000 homeowners say the main reason they haven't installed solar panels is that they think a lack of sunshine means they won't work properly. In reality, solar panels work in all daylight weather conditions.

The Green Home Company, a provider of renewable-energy systems, says when looking at saving money on energy bills, 4.8 million people in the region are unaware solar panels can help them pay less. But the company says homeowners can expect to save up to 50 per cent off their energy bills by installing solar panels.

Industry data indicate the average household spends £1,200 per year on energy bills. This is predicted to rise significantly in the coming years as result of rising costs.

John Benner, managing director at The Green Home Company, said: "Clearly, people really aren't fully aware of just how easy it is to save money with solar panels."

"With energy bills predicted to increase dramatically, people need to be armed with the correct information about how much money they can save as, in the vast majority of cases, it's significantly more than they might think. Solar panels are an effective way of combating rising utility costs and we encourage everyone to investigate their home's potential today."

Homes & Gardens

Birds count... and so can you!

Our gardens are brighter and better places for the birds that visit or live in them – and you have the chance to help monitor how they are faring.

The weekend of Saturday and Sunday, January 26-27, sees Big Garden Birdwatch, the annual monitoring of the UK's avian population by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds.

The charity is asking volunteers to spend an hour recording the maximum number of each species they see at any one time.

An RSPB spokesman said: "By giving up one hour of your day, you'll be making a real difference to our knowledge of garden birds. We'll be able to distinguish the ones that are doing well from those that need our help.

"Life's so busy – how often do you get to sit back and really notice the wildlife around you?"

The society has compiled a list of the country's most common garden species:

■ House Sparrow

One of the most cosmopolitan of all birds. Its population is normally highest where humans live, its spread and distribution following closely that of human settlements.

■ Starling

Starlings often roost in massive numbers, but their numbers have declined by three-quarters in recent years.

■ Blue Tit

Blue Tits breed in their first year and pair formation takes place in the winter after moulting the previous year's feathers.

■ Blackbird

This species can breed up to four times a year. It usually lays up to five speckled-brown, blue-green eggs. The incubation time is 13-14 days on average.

■ Chaffinch

Chaffinches have been known to live for a remarkable 14 years.

■ Woodpigeon

This is a bird that has made a strong advance into towns from the country.

■ Goldfinch

Goldfinches build their nests on the outer twigs at the end of a branch; they particularly favour fruit trees.

■ Great Tit

A species perhaps best known for its piercing 'Teacher! Teacher!' song, which sounds very much like a bicycle pump and is usually heard in the spring and summer.

■ Robin

Robins first appeared on Christmas cards as a representation of Victorian postmen, who wore red tunics and were known as 'redbreasts'. They are also associated with Christmas because they hold territories by singing in the winter.

■ Collared Dove

Collared Doves aren't great nest-makers –

sometimes chicks fall through the flimsy branches. Collared Doves are chiefly vegetarian, finding most of their food from the ground or on bird tables.

■ Dunnock

Dunnocks are well known for 'trios', with a female and two males attending a nest.

■ Magpie

Magpie numbers have quadrupled in the last 35 years. This is a direct result of the reduction in persecution as lowland game-keeping declined. Their population was at a low-point in the 1960s and it increased until the late 1980s; for the past 20 years it has remained fairly constant.

■ Long-tailed Tit

The Long-tailed Tit makes a tennis-ball-sized nest out of moss and spiders' webs. As the fluffy chicks grow, the nest expands around them. If a breeding attempt fails, the pair will split up and go to the nest of a sibling to help raise the chicks.

■ Greenfinch

In spring, the males perform a wonderful display flight, looking more like butterflies. They sing a simple but musical song.

■ Wren

After a male wren has attracted one mate, it will go out and secure a second... or even more!

■ Visit www.rspb.org.uk/birdwatch if you would like to take part in Big Garden Birdwatch 2013.

Council makes letting a home easy as ABC

THE private rented housing sector is a popular option for many families, but they are often prevented from accessing it because they cannot afford to pay large amounts of rent in advance, high deposits and fees.

This means they often ask a council for assistance in finding suitable accommodation in the private rented sector.

This year Ashford Borough Council's cabinet members agreed to proceed with creating ABC Lettings (A Better Choice Lettings agency for Ashford). The service has been designed to help landlords offer properties for rent to households the council has identified as being on local housing allowance rent levels.

The first landlords have now begun to sign up to the scheme, meaning the council conducts all the relevant checks on the prospective tenants and then brokers a tenancy agreement between the applicant and landlord.

With one option, the landlord has the guarantee that rent will be paid for the duration of the tenancy plus the reassurance the tenancy will be fully managed.

Cliff Johnson, one of the first landlords to sign up to the scheme, said: "ABC Lettings appealed to me as it is a hassle-free option. It enables me to be a landlord, but at arm's length. Landlords can be reassured things will be managed for them, freeing their time up, particularly if they live outside the borough."

ABC Lettings has been devised in anticipation of a further reduction in funding from central government, the benefit reform and the potential knock-on effects of the troubled economic climate being experienced.

Operating in a similar way to a high-street lettings agency, ABC Lettings focuses its attention on tenants who are normally seen as high risk when often they are refused simply because they can not meet the requirements of agents or landlords.

Furthermore, the National Landlords Association has confirmed schemes of this nature do not compete with high-street agencies.

IT'S one thing to have an affordable and surprisingly practical new coupé, but it has to have some image, too.

And this is a gaping hole now plugged by Hyundai with a more muscular flagship to head a Veloster range that had, frankly, been missing a bit of velocity.

The new Veloster Turbo is almost a different beast, being visually, dynamically and aurally much changed from the rather humdrum launch version.

Hyundai says the latter will still deliver most sales, but the new Turbo will surely drive the image of the range as a whole and attract keener drivers, deservedly so even if it's up against tough rivals in a sharply-defined market niche led by the VW Scirocco, Vauxhall Astra GTC and Renault Megane.

The new Toyota GT86/Subaru BRZ cooperative venture also deserves a mention both on price and driver appeal, though it won't challenge the Hyundai on creature comforts and interior style.

In truth, though, the Hyundai still doesn't quite have the handling sharpness to attack any of these cars head-on as a sporting coupé, even though the 1.6-litre petrol turbo engine delivers loads more low-down punch compared with the unblown GDi version and will hit 62mph in 8.2 seconds against 9.7.

But then it's not just about power and speed here; the Veloster Turbo also looks the part with a beefed-up front end, including a deeper radiator grille, and prominent twin exhausts and diffuser at the back. Sideskirts add to the powerful stance of the car.

It even has its own colour palette, too, including a matt grey – not cheap at an extra £525, but maybe money well spent to those who like the stealth-fighter look.

And, of course, there's the Veloster's unique ace-up-the-sleeve: a extra door on the kerbside allowing easy access for passengers in the back, particularly ideal for those who want a racy motor without the hassle of tipping front seats or leaning right into the back to belt up the kids.

Admittedly, it doesn't look promising in there for anyone over the age of 10, thanks to that wickedly-raked rear roof, but access is surprisingly good and I found it pretty easy to slide across to the other side.

The third door is cleverly integrated into the car's profile and, since you never view both sides together, you won't spot the difference unless you go for the schizophrenic effect of sitting in the front and glancing over each shoulder in quick succession.

Typically, the specification is generous, with this new T-GDi flagship selling at a tempting £21,995 backed by Hyundai's five-year/unlimited mileage warranty, and including leather seats – the driver's is electrically adjustable – and a seven-inch multifunction touchscreen display for eight-speaker sounds, sat-nav and reverse-parking camera.

SEAT re-launches the Toledo name on Saturday, December 1, in the form of a value-for-money car (from £12,495) to sit between its Ibiza supermini and the forthcoming Leon hatchback replacement.

Volkswagen's Spanish arm last used the Toledo name on an MPV axed some three years ago. Its belated replacement looks like a small saloon but has a hatchback for added versatility.

Alfa makes an attractive deal

GLAMOROUS Italian car brand Alfa Romeo has unveiled tempting autumn finance packages, starting at just £169 a month plus deposit for its sporting MiTo three-door supermini.

Deals for the bigger five-door Alfa Giulietta, left, start at £199 a month plus deposit.

The MiTo entry offer is on the 1.3 Diesel 85bhp Sprint, which is Congestion Charge and road tax-exempt.

VOLVO has added more eye-catching models to the smart new V40 five-door hatchback line-up.

They are the racy looking V40 R-Design and V40 Cross Country, priced from £22,295 and £22,595 respectively.

R-Design, above, highlights are its reprofiled front bumper and rear diffuser, five-spoke 17-inch alloys and sporty cabin, while its sister gets roof rails and the rugged off-road look.

Kia re-Ceeding market appeal

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

KIA'S impressive design supremo and former Audi star Peter Schreyer could do little more than sign off the previous Kia Ceed profile when he arrived at the Korean car-maker.

This time around, his signature is writ large across the car; it's altogether more stylish and features Kia's Schreyer-inspired and now trademark 'tiger nose' grille flanked by distinctive swept-back headlamp clusters with upmarket LED running lights.

For on-road presence it need not doff its cap to rivals and it is now a formidable challenger to the family hatchback sector leader, the VW Golf – a car that Kia admits was the key benchmark in the new Ceed's development.

What's even more impressive, though, is how quickly Kia has achieved this near-parity with the VW star – no one would have bet on this 10 years ago, before the original Ceed was conceived.

When it arrived in 2007, it was a game-changer, conceived and built in Europe for Europe and highlighting Kia's progress and value for money, also pioneering the brand's incredible and still unchallenged worry-free seven-year/100,000-mile warranty.

From that, the marque has built several other new stars; the second-generation Ceed (from £14,395) seems set to kick on from there.

In some areas, it still cannot quite compete with the Golf and its other big rivals, the Ford Focus and Vauxhall Astra, but it looks good and still offers value, with acclaimed reliability backed by that warranty, while you sense that badge snobbery against the brand is on the wane – buying a Ceed can be a smart choice rather than one made to please the wallet.

Where does it fall short, then?

Well, keen drivers may find the handling less interesting and, despite useful 'comfort', 'normal' and 'sporty' settings for the steering, you don't get too much feedback from it – certainly

MOVER AND SHAKER:

Kia has made huge strides with its Ceed and now has a family hatchback that could seriously threaten the dominance of the market-leading VW Golf and other big rivals the Ford Focus and Vauxhall Astra not compared with rivals mentioned previously.

But most buyers won't worry about any of this and simply enjoy the car's solidity and build quality, a roomy cabin with good rear legroom, a decent-size boot and a dashboard that mirrors the quality and practicality of the Golf but shows more flair.

As I said after my first drive of the car earlier in the year, I'm not convinced of the quality of the seats in terms of comfort and trimming unless you go for leather, but I'm sure Kia will address this later – this is a brand that has shown it really does listen to media and consumer comment.

And it does look like I'm nit-picking when you consider the high equipment levels.

The range is offered with a choice of 1.4- and 1.6-litre engines in both petrol or diesel, and all of the manual 1.6 versions get Kia's eco-friendly ISG (intelligent stop and go) package.

In the case of the mid-spec Ceed 2 1.6CRDi test car, this gives you the equivalent of the VW Golf BlueMotion eco star for £18,295 – almost two grand less and with more standard goodies including Bluetooth and cruise control – and with the same capability to escape road tax and average more than 70mpg.

I've no experience of the 1.4 Ceed but would say the 1.6 petrol alternative is also worth a look (from £17,195) for those not racking up enough miles to justify spending extra on the diesel; it's livelier, though surprisingly vocal about it compared with the diesel, yet will still average a creditable 50mpg or thereabouts with the ISG and eco features.

For those needing just a bit more space, there is a newly-launched and stylish estate or SW – as Kia prefers – with the prospect of a racy three-door Proceed later

Davis calls on friends to help with recovery

TONBRIDGE Angels midfielder Tom Davis has called on the help of his friends in a bid to recover from his broken leg.

The 28-year-old has played just one and a half games for Tommy Warrilow's side since signing in the summer. He broke his leg in a 50-50 tackle in just the second game of the season against Salisbury and has since had to watch from the sidelines.

However he is nearing his return and was hoping to play some part in this weekend's game against Bath City.

He was advised to stay in a cast for six weeks which would have lengthened his time away from the first team due to his fitness dropping.

But a few phone calls to former Fulham team doctor Dr Ian Beasley, now head of medical services at the FA and who Davis knows from his days as a youth team player at Craven Cottage, changed that plan and he stayed in the cast just a week.

"Originally they were going to put me in a cast for six weeks because it was the NHS," he said. "I spoke to the people I knew to find out what they thought. I have had a lot of experienced people to speak to and they've dealt with it before."

Having more time out of the cast has enabled him to keep his fitness up, but he isn't expecting to get back to match fitness for a little while yet.

"It's going to take a bit of time, it's going to be like pre-season again," he said. "Hopefully I should pick it up okay because I have done the pre-season. My fitness naturally is good. It's not like I have put on any weight or anything."

"I just want to play now and give back to the club because they've helped me out. I have come to home games, but for the away games, I have been in the gym to help myself get back. I don't want to be sitting on a coach and doing just a few minutes running before a game."

It's not an ideal situation joining a club and then getting injured so soon, but he insists he feels part of the team.

"When you're injured you're detached from the team a little bit," he said. "It's hard, but I'm not bothered. Some people might feel left out. I'm quite settled."

SKELETON

Yarnold set to hit the slopes as season gets under way with the British trials

By Greg Miles

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

AFTER eight months away from the track Lizzy Yarnold is set to get back to action next weekend in the trials for the British Skeleton team.

The 23-year-old, who was born in Maidstone and now lives in West Kingsdown, had an impressive 2011/12 season, ending it with a bronze at the World Championships, a gold at the Junior World Championships, and two golds on the World Cup circuit of races.

She jetted out to Norway last week in preparation for her first major test of the winter - British selection trials.

Next Saturday and Sunday she will take part in four races, with the three racers with the quickest overall times making it into the World Cup team for the season. But there are no nerves for Yarnold who's taking it all in her stride.

Speaking from Norway, she said: "I'm a person who doesn't really get nervous. The sport is so fast and exciting - I get up to 90mph - so there is an exciting feeling."

"When I was younger I went skiing and went head first down a black run. I think it was then that my parents knew I would get involved in something crazy."

"Your first run is always a bit nerve-wracking. You think 'am I going to remember how to do this?' But it's like riding a bike, you get back into it. You start at the top and finish at the bottom and just hope everything goes well."

"The selection races are some of the hardest of the year, so I'm just going to do my best."

It's the start of months away from home, meaning she had to pack her bags accordingly.

"I have packed lots of films and games, and I've got quite a few podcasts downloaded," she said. "We went to a winter driving school as well to learn to drive in the winter conditions, which was useful. We have to take these things into consideration."

Although her last race was in February where she won the bronze at the World Championships in Lake Placid, America, she hasn't been putting her feet up over the summer. In fact she's been hitting the gym three times a day for six days a week. There is also a 100m stretch of dry track to practice starts on at Bath University, where the skeleton team is based.

CALM: Lizzy

Yarnold's nerves of steel proved their worth last season when she claimed a number of titles including a bronze medal at the World Championships, having previously won gold at the World Junior Championships.

"We don't have UK ice training. I don't compete for eight months at all. During the summer we do a lot of training in the gym. We work on our explosive power," she said.

The icy nature of the sport means she always has to be on her toes, but it's made all the more difficult by the fact that the shape and conditions of the tracks she races on can change overnight.

But she feels it's increased her ability: "It's been really good in terms of my learning. I feel like I've improved my lines. When you go to the track you have six minutes practice to be able to learn it."

"I'm up against people that have been doing it for 10 or 15 years and have raced on these tracks hundreds of times. Lots of the learning can be done from head cams. But the runs are constantly changing. I feel like I have improved my skill. I know I'm in a good place."

While this summer's attention was on east London and the Olympics, Yarnold had one eye on the next winter games in Sochi, Russia, in 2014, and has been to the site several times to check on the progress that's been made in building it.

"I didn't really know about the sport at all until four years ago," she said. "I'm really looking forward to Sochi. There's a long way to go between now and then though. I have got to focus on the now."

"I'm absolutely on form, everything is going to plan, I'm just going to do my best."

One woman that put the sport into the public eye at the last winter games was Amy Williams, who won gold in Vancouver, Canada, in 2010. She retired this summer.

"She was an excellent team mate. We are a very small squad, so she will be greatly missed," said Yarnold.

MOTORSPORT

Byrne hopes for fourth title, but MotoGP is an option

SHANE Byrne admits there is a tinge of disappointment in claiming his record-equalling third British Superbike Championship title.

The 35-year-old rode into the history books in commanding fashion at Brands Hatch last weekend claiming all three races of the final of the three title-deciding 'Showdowns'. He had only jumped to the top of the leader board at the previous round having trailed all season in his bid to add to his 2003 and 2008 triumphs.

That disappointment comes from a desire to not just follow in the footsteps of other triple champions Niall Mackenzie and Ryuichi Kiyonari, but to become the best.

"In some ways it's the most disappointing title win," said the Sheppey rider. "I'm a three-time champion, but people have done that already. I don't want to do what has already been done. I want to be the best. A big part of me wants to win a fourth."

With his team, Paul Bird Motorsport, involved in MotoGP it remains to be seen whether he will be back to challenge for his fourth title.

"I honestly don't know. The decision will be made in the next ten days or two weeks I think," he said.

"I want to stay with my team, but my team have two competitions to think about, the MotoGP and BSB."

Byrne is no stranger to the MotoGP circus after making the move following his title triumph in 2003. But he struggled to keep up with the pace due to a string of problems and by 2006 he returned to BSB.

But that is a decision for the coming weeks.

It was feared he may not even put up a fight for the 2012 title as the season drew to its nail-biting conclusion. A crash at Cadwell Park at the end of August left him with serious shoulder ligament damage. But he returned at Assen in Holland for the first Showdown weekend in style.

"I'm not the sort of person to give up. I think if you had seen my leg off I would have got back on the bike somehow," he said. "We went there three and a half weeks after major shoulder surgery with a second and a first. It was a surprise for everybody. I think I had four wins and three seconds."

Byrne took the lead in the standings for the first time this season in the penultimate round at Silverstone.

It was a long night on Sunday as he celebrated the title with his team: "The celebrations were pretty big, but not quite as big as the hangover I had."

He said he and his team learnt a big lesson from last season when technical problems left him stranded in the Showdown having dominated all year. There would be no repeat of the disappointment.

"At the end of the day," Byrne reflects, "I'm just a piece of the jigsaw. If everything else wasn't there it wouldn't happen."

WINNER: Shane Byrne clinched his third BSB title

It's 902 not out for Stones non-league legend Ward

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

THE common cold is responsible for many things, including wiping out foreign civilisations hundreds of years ago. It's also played its part less famously, in the glittering non-league career of Maidstone United's Steve Ward.

The Stones player-assistant manager recently made his 902nd appearance in a career that's spanned 24 years. It started thanks to a cold doing the rounds at Grays Athletic where a young Ward was looking to break into the first team from the reserves as a 17-year-old. He put in a performance in the semi-final of the Essex Senior Cup, alongside a 41-year-old, that earned him a place in the starting lineup for the final.

Nowadays he refers to his position as substitute as well as manager Jay Saunders' right-hand man at the Ryman One South side. His story is another dream come true tale at the club as he watched the Stones in the football league as a youngster without ever playing for them until this season at the age of 41.

"I don't think about the historical details," he said. "1,000 games is too far away now. I'm just determined to help them get promoted this year. I have lived in Maidstone all my life. I went to all the big games. I used to go up every Saturday when I was 13 with my dad.

"I could have joined a couple of years ago, but the thought of going to Sittingbourne (where the club trained until this summer) didn't appeal, it just seemed a soulless place to go and play.

"I'm a bit determined with football, I don't

DETERMINED: Maidstone player-assistant manager Steve Ward watched the club as a teenager and now aged 41 he's joined to help them get promoted into the Ryman Premier know when to stop. I will just keep going."

Before signing this summer he spent his entire career on the pitch in Essex. It started when he sent a letter to Grays as a teenager asking for a trial. He went on to become a legend at Canvey Island in a side that made it to the third round of the FA Cup in 2002 where they lost to Burnley who beat them 4-1 at Turf Moor. He then went on to play for Chelmsford, before his second spell at Canvey finished last season.

"I wanted a complete change, so I told my mum I was going to write off for some trials, and could she take me to training," he said. "It turned out I went to Grays, it was a fresh start and nobody had any preconceptions about me."

He started doing a bit of coaching while he was out injured last year at Canvey.

"I have played for so long, but I didn't really see the game. But having watched it the last couple of years from the bench, I have more of an understanding. I just help out doing one to one stuff, which I wish I had in my career."

RUGBY

Westcombe's loss could be Wells' gain as Jervis resigns

SIMON Jervis has resigned from his position as director of rugby at Westcombe Park, but intends to continue his coaching role at Tunbridge Wells.

Jervis has spent the last two years at Westcombe as a coach having been a player there for eight years. This summer his director of rugby role at Westcombe became part time, as he took on a coaching role at Wells.

But Jervis, who works as a teacher at Skinners School, admitted the commuting to south London from his home in East Sussex proved too much.

"It has been a hard decision," he said. "It's been made for everybody's best interests really. Westcombe will have someone there on a more regular basis, and the players need someone that's more visible.

"At the beginning of the season the discussion at Westcombe was basically to see if a part time post could be done. It's probably not worked out quite as well as we would have liked it to. If Westcombe had won more games early on maybe it might have been a bit of a cover up for that, but it still wasn't the right thing for the long term. It's come to its conclusion earlier than we thought.

"Obviously I will be keeping an eye on their scores, and talking to the guys up there to offer my support."

He is hoping to spend more time at Wells in his coaching role developing younger players.

"They are a great bunch of players. I think they perhaps lacked a bit of direction in the past and I'm hoping we will be able to help them out with that."

Jackson eyeing title as Brands gets set for BTCC

REDSTONE Racing will be hoping to make home advantage count this weekend as Mat Jackson chases the independent drivers' title in the last round of the British Touring Car Championships.

Two weeks ago at Silverstone Jackson delivered the first podium of the season for the Kent-based team run by Motorbase Performance. It's given him an outside chance of claiming the independent drivers title in the final three races which take place this Sunday.

"Silverstone was a great achievement by all of the Redstone Racing team," he said. "The first win is always the hardest and now that we have achieved this, we can further improve and hopefully can challenge for more wins in the finale at Brands Hatch this weekend to round off the season with a high. We are under no illusion that it will be tough, but we like a challenge."

Meanwhile there are still four drivers in the hunt for the overall title. Former BTCC champions and old rivals Matt Neal and Jason Plato will both be aiming to

RESPECT: Ling hired Schofield at Cambridge

Bouncy Schofield is a big asset for Gills says Gulls boss Ling

IT will be a case of friends reunited on Tuesday night when Gillingham assistant manager John Schofield meets his former boss.

Martin Allen's Gills take on Martin Ling's Gulls at Torquay's Plainmoor in what promises to be an entertaining tie if last season's encounter is anything to go by. On that occasion Gills midfielder Chris Whelpdale netted a goal of the season contender in a 5-2 win in October.

This season's clash is a chance for Schofield to catch up with Ling who employed him as assistant manager at Cambridge at the start of the 2010/11 season. It proved to be an ill-fated seven months at the Blue Square Premier side as they lost their jobs February 2011 after a poor start.

"I met John on an A licence course many moons ago. We became good friends on that course and we have always talked to each other," he said. "When an opportunity to get an assistant in at Cambridge came about John got in touch. He was out of work at Lincoln and suggested we might be a good partnership.

"The time there wasn't great, not because of anything John did though. We didn't have a good start and by the end of January in the first season we were asked to leave."

He pinpointed the energy that Schofield brings to the team as one of his greatest assets.

He said: "John is a brilliant coach, he's loves to be out on the grass, for me he was first class. He's worked with Martin [Allen] at three different clubs now so that says it all really. I don't think he would ever be out of work long if he became available.

"You never see him without a smile on his face. Every single day he would bounce in and then bounce off to the training ground, and that makes managing a football team a bit easier."

Torquay have plenty of promotion ambitions of their own having lost to Cheltenham in the play-off semi finals last season, but they were 11 points behind the Gills before the weekend's fixtures. Despite Gillingham's incredible start with just one loss before this weekend's visit of Burton Albion, Ling knows his opposite number on Tuesday won't be putting his feet up.

He said: "Martin [Allen] will be the first to say there's only a quarter of the season gone and a big chunk left. It's a marathon not a sprint.

"I get on great with him. You always get a hard game, and a hard hand shake at the end."
